He insisted that he was not a stalking horse for national Democrats such as Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, Democrat of Minnesota, who would like to see the huge 280-member California delegation denied to the current slates of contenders fighting each other in the primary for the nomination. "I really doubt if any of the current primary contenders is really going to be nominated," he said.

... after the student personalities and emotions of that time, and that it will not be repeated, at least during this election. Gone, too, are the massive canvassings, the complicated operations to enlist campus recruits and the high-powered drive to get the votes of young people, which the student workers made possible. "It seems almost an impossible dream at this point to get students involved," said Jerry Ciarpelli, upstate student coordinator for Jimmy Carter, who has been trying to organize young people in the region north of Poughkeepsie for these coordinators, students themselves, the "McGovern wave" phenomenon brought by the issues, per-

COALITION BACKS UDALL AFTER PLEA TO UNIFY LIBERALS

70% of Democratic Group That Once Leaned to Bayh Rallies Behind Arizona

By PETER KIHSS
The New Democratic Coalition, which seeks to speak for the liberal wing of the New York State Democratic Party, yesterday endorsed Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona for the party's Presidential nomination. The endorsement was backed by 70 percent of a state delegate assembly attended by about 200 persons at Public School 41, 116 West 11th Street, after efforts were made to promote him as a choice behind whom progressives should unite. The sudden move to put an endorsement on the agenda, 16 days before the state's April 6 primary, followed a vote last Dec. 6 in which the group was heavily divided.

Bayh's Near Victory

At that time, Senator Birch Bayh of Indiana, no longer an active contestant, polled 59.94 percent, but supporters of former Senator Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma, who held 30.21 percent, and forces opposing any endorsement blocked his efforts to gain the 60 percent required for endorsement. The group, which has 100 affiliated clubs and claims 14,000 members, also elected Frances Bennick, a district leader in Richmond Hill, Queens, as state chairman in a three-way contest. Arnold M. Weiss, a lawyer, who has been chairman since December 1972, did not seek re-election, asserting: "There should be in a reform organization a rotation of leadership."

Not Always Nonconformist

Coalition members, even more than members of old-line Democratic clubs, tend to be free spirits in their choices and do not necessarily follow the coalition's endorsements. The breakdown of weighted voting was Mr. Udall, 10.02 percent; Mr. Harris, 8.33; former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, 5.57; Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, 2.66; Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington, 1.67; Senator Frank Church of Idaho, 1.47; no endorsement, 8.77; abstention, .82; and the late Socialist leader, Eugene V. Debs, .69. Before the vote, Bartle Bull, Mr. Carter's state campaign manager, who is president of The Village Voice, said he was not asking for a Carter endorsement because of insufficient opportunity to present an adequate case. But he said Mr. Carter had so far shown he could win in eight states and that he stood for federalizing

Hearst Jurors Hoped to Believe

By LACEY FOSBURGH
Special to The New York Times
SAN FRANCISCO, March 21—The jurors in the trial of Patricia Hearst wanted "all in our hearts," as one said, to believe that she was innocent, but they felt obliged to vote for conviction because "the steady accumulation of evidence against her" and the quality of her defense left them no choice. They regarded the Government's evidence against Miss Hearst as so persuasive, some of them say, that when deliberations began Friday morning they discovered in minutes that all but perhaps three of them considered her guilty and found her story of coercion by her abductors and fear of them unbelievable.

Some of them liked Miss Hearst and thought her "sweet." Others thought her "cruel." But all of them, apparently, believed that she was lying during much of her testimony. These are the highlights of a series of interviews last night and this morning with several of the seven women and five men on the jury. Each said in his own way that the decision to find Miss Hearst guilty of armed bank robbery and of using a firearm to commit a felony was the "most difficult" of his or her life—more difficult, specifically, than the decision to get married, or have children or change jobs. The interviews also produced a wide range of observations about the evidence and the witnesses, suggesting that, from the jury's point of view, the trial was, perhaps from the very beginning, weighted overwhelmingly in favor of the Government. When deliberations began, for example, the few who leaned toward acquittal were not firm or intransigent in their beliefs and, indeed, acknowledged that there was little concrete evidence on the defense side to support their convictions. This situation led others to conclude, perhaps as early as noon Friday, that a verdict of guilty—rather than a hung jury—was a likely prospect. "It was very clear what

BANGKOK, Thailand, March 21—The United States today closed all operations at bases in Thailand in preparation for its final military withdrawal, as several thousand students demonstrated in front of the American Embassy in downtown Bangkok. At least four persons were killed and 70 injured by an explosion during the demonstrations, which opposed the American presence here and its continuation for four months. A grenade or homemade bomb went off in the crowd as it marched through the capital to the embassy compound. ## VIOLENT STORMS STRIKE NORTHEAST

Temperature in City Drops 10 Degrees in Half-Hour
By WOLFGANG SAXON
Violent thunderstorms with gale-force winds hit parts of the northeastern states yesterday afternoon, striking erratically and causing widespread injuries and damage—even cutting short a late St. Patrick's Day parade in western Massachusetts. Roofs and trees were blown over to the metropolitan area along with a tennis "bubble" in Brooklyn. Two cranes toppled into Baltimore harbor. A Philadelphia radio station was knocked off the air, and thousands of Connecticut residents were left without electricity for a time before the storms moved on quickly to reach an area east of Cape Cod by nightfall. The brief but furious onslaught turned Times Square dark in mid-afternoon and dropped the temperature 10 degrees in half an hour.

Miss Hearst Is Facing New Test in State Cases

By WALLACE TURNER
Special to The New York Times
SAN FRANCISCO, March 21—Judge Carter on April 19. She Patricia Hearst, convicted yesterday of armed bank robbery, will be turned over to California state authorities this week to face charges ranging from kidnapping to armed robbery, her Federal prosecutor said today. United States Attorney James L. Browning Jr. said that his forecast was based on conversations earlier today with Federal District Judge Oliver J. Carter, who presided at Miss Hearst's eight-week trial. "The Government will make the defendant available to Los Angeles authorities as soon as the background interviews for her presence investigation report are concluded," Mr. Browning said. "That will be about midweek."

Anti-Boycott Law Trims Port's Mideast Traffic

By RICHARD PHALON
Exporters, apparently worried about breaching a new state law that makes aiding the Arab boycott of Israel a misdemeanor, are diverting cargo destined for the Middle East from New York City to other ports. The law, an amendment to the State's Human Rights Act, became effective Jan. 1. According to James J. Dickman, president of the New York Shipping Association, it is too early to tell exactly how hard the port has been hit so far. "We just know we're losing an awful lot of freight," he said in an interview. "We're probably losing a minimum of two million tons a year." That figure would represent about 9.5 percent of the total 21 million tons of general cargo the port of New York handled last year. The port, partly because of its comparatively high operating costs, has been losing

General Sets Up Council

Earlier Gen. Aziz al-Ahdad, commander of the Beirut garrison who 10 days ago declared himself military governor of Lebanon, announced that he had set up a 14-man command council to "coordinate" military operations if President Franjieh, a Christian, the shells appeared to be coming from Christian neighborhoods to the east and were apparently in retaliation for the capture of the Holiday Inn. The events pointed toward further violence in this country, which has been torn for 10 months by civil war between leftist Moslem and Christian factions on one side and rightist Christians on the other. The final assault on the hotel was led by an armored personnel carrier, which crashed into

Red Scare Is Over and the Sun Draws Vacationers Against Portugal's South

By MARVINE HOWE
Special to The New York Times
FARO, Portugal, March 21 — The tourists who fled in panic last year when they thought Portugal was going to be taken over by the Communists are beginning to come back to the Algarve.

The New York Times/March 22, 1978
Tourists are returning to Portugal's Algarve.

Foreign tourists can once again be seen in the waterfront cafes here in the capital of Portugal's southernmost province, the real estate market has begun to stir and a few new buildings are going up. There are plans for an international golf tournament in the fall. And last week an art exhibit opened, the first in many months because such activities were considered "fascist" after the 1974 revolution that overthrew the right-wing dictatorship.

"For the last two weeks, we've sold a villa a day and prices are headed toward prerevolution levels," she said. The buyers are new Dutch and mostly Portuguese. Most of the 600 villas at the Vale do Lobo development were bought before 1973 by British and Americans who spent their vacations here and then retook them at other times of the year.

"Tourists?" a housewife stopped to ask a barber as a score of large cars sped by on the road from the airport this weekend.

"Now we're short of houses for rent," Miss de Sousa said. She said she was trying to persuade owners who wanted to sell their villas to rent them until buyers offered a good price. Construction was begun recently on one new house and three have already been sold. The nearby Hotel Dona Felipa, where things were so bad last summer that the staff agreed to take half-pay, is also said to be doing well, with 40 to 50 percent wintertime occupancy.

A Gain in Prestige
President Tito and his companions were not exactly ordinary tourists. Nevertheless, Algarve tourism gained points with the visit of the Yugoslav leader, who came here for a weekend rest after his official visit to Latin America.

"The Portuguese are discovering the Algarve now," Miss de Sousa said. Before the revolution, it was fashionable for the Portuguese to travel to such countries as Spain, France and Italy. Now, because of currency restrictions, they can take only the equivalent of $750 out of the country a year, and so are traveling within Portugal and to the Portuguese islands of the Azores and Madeira.

Business has picked up at Vale do Lobo after a low point eight months ago, according to Leonina de Sousa, the Portuguese woman who is in charge of sales. She said that last summer people were selling for less than $60,000 villas that had cost them $75,000.

used to sell only to foreigners and now all his customers are Portuguese and they are paying much less than the foreigners for properties. An Argentine recently sold two villas for half the price he paid for them four years ago, Mr. Gomes said.

Hotels Lose Workers
The revolution has brought other problems to the Algarve. For one thing, the hotel business lost its best workers. Managers left in the post-revolution unrest, taking their assistants with them to Brazil, the United States, Morocco.

Most of the hotels in the Algarve—like the hotels in Lisbon—have been used to house refugees from Portugal's African colonies. The Hotel Faro, for example, has only 52 rooms and 18 are taken up by refugees and their families.

The Ministry of Tourism says that refugees will be evacuated from four- and five-star hotels by the start of the tourist season next month, but the refugees insist they will not move until decent housing is provided. Another problem is the rise in the cost of living. Earlier, retired Englishmen settled in the Algarve because they could live in style on a modest pension. But since the revolution living costs have soared and retired families are going elsewhere.

Food in Short Supply
Still another serious problem is the decline in food production. Before the revolution, when workers earned low salaries, they supplemented their incomes by growing vegetables and fruits and raising rabbits, pigs and chickens at home. Now, with the higher salaries, they don't have to do the home farming and, in fact, cannot afford it because of the high cost of animal feed and the low price for farm produce.

The monthly farmers' market at Algoz is selling only about a third of what it did before the revolution. Even fish production has declined. Trawler owners are selling their vessels because of the high price of fuel oil and labor.

The arrival of Marshal Tito and President Costa Gomes here with their corteges was enough to upset the delicate food supply. There was no fresh fish in the main market at Armação da Pera because it had all been reserved for Marshal Tito and Faro restaurants served frozen fish.

But, in general, the impact of political upheaval was not felt so strongly here as in north and central Portugal.

"In Lisbon the Socialists and Communists and centrists insult each other all the time but here we say, 'Let's all take a drink and talk things over,'" said Julio Correia, a Faro businessman.

CHINESE SUGGESTING TENG MIGHT REPENT

PEKING, March 21 (Reuters)—The newspaper Jenmin Jih Pao appeared to hint today that Deputy Prime Minister Teog Hsiao-pung, who has been the target of a wall-poster campaign, could still survive politically if he would "sincerely repent."

In a front-page commentary, the newspaper asked if Mr. Teog would continue playing tricks "or have a genuine change of heart and sincerely repent."

"People are watching to see what his attitude is," it said. Informed observers said that the article was a strong hint that if Mr. Teog did "repent" he might be able to become a working Deputy Prime Minister again.

The commentary in the newspaper, which is the official paper of the Chinese Communist Party, was also seen as a sign that Mr. Teog, with the stubbornness for which he is renowned, was refusing to bow before the torrent of abuse launched by his ultraleftist critics.

The article went on to ask: "Will that capitalist reader who is trying to reverse verdicts be able to change his hourglass stand under the renewed criticism of the people of the whole country and with their help?"

Sharon, a Military Hero, Quits as Adviser to Rabin

JERUSALEM, March 21 (AP)—Maj. Gen. Ariel Sharon, Israeli hero of the 1973 Mideast war, said today that he was resigning as military adviser to Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and warned of "grave deterioration" in Israel's political and military posture.

The silver-haired general, a conservative who advocates annexation of all Israeli-held Arab land, said that Israel should prepare for another war with the Arabs.

In a state television interview, General Sharon said that he was quitting as Mr. Rabin's adviser effective April 1.

desian Drama Engrosses South Africa

HENRY KAMM
The New York Times

Government in its thinking. The idea of black majority rule in Rhodesia is as unpalatable to them as it is to white Rhodesians.

This feeling is not restricted to Afrikaners but prevails also among the significant sector of the English-speaking population that considers white Rhodesians a kindred people.

The bond of emotional kinship between the ruling white minorities of the two countries, buttressed by the certainty that their present high standard of living is bound to be lowered by a rise in black political power, makes the application of overt South African pressure on Mr. Smith a matter of domestic political sensitivity.

Sensitive to Sanctions

For that reason, South Africa's problem is not to have refrained from applying the most direct means of pressure available: its complete closure of its border with Rhodesia, over all land access to Rhodesia.

A second reason motivates South Africa in refusing to join in the blockade against Rhodesian imports and exports: South Africa feels it cannot admit the use of sanctions or boycotts for political aims anywhere because of its own sensitivity to such pressure.

South Africa's bold diplomatic initiative, carried out in conjunction with such moderate black heads of state as Presidents Kenneth D. Kaunda of Zambia and Sir Seretse Khama of Botswana, to bring Mr. Smith and Mr. Nkomo to the negotiating table appears to have collapsed with the breakdown of the talks.

Mr. Kaunda's call for full support of a liberation war against the white Rhodesian Government has returned Mr. Vorster's most important partner in the southern African initiative to the militant camp. This leaves Mr. Vorster few options in efforts to forestall the consequences "too ghastly to contemplate" which he once said were the only alternative to a negotiated settlement in Rhodesia.

South African diplomats are believed to be impressing on Mr. Smith their Government's unreadiness to take any military measures to his support. But Mr. Smith is known to feel that the South African whites will not allow their Government to stand by idly if white lives are endangered in Rhodesia.

Mr. Smith is said to suspect, with some justification, that South African hawks have been strengthened in their negative attitude toward Mr. Vorster's policy of accommodation by the success of the Soviet and Cuban intervention in Angola and by a growing feeling that military considerations require the presentation of all possible anti-Communist buttwarks.

But the failure of South African intervention in Angola, which had been based on a hope that Western powers, particularly the United States, would support that military effort, has provided arguments equally to South African doves, who believe that accommodation, rather than confrontation, is an isolated country's best hope.

The continuing prevalence of the dove view in the South African Government was evidenced in Mr. Vorster's announcement last night that remaining South African troops in Angola would be withdrawn this week.

In official circles it is said that concrete measures in the event of an intensified war in Rhodesia have not yet been decided upon. These circles assert that Mr. Smith has been clearly told that South Africa is not committed to prop up his Government.

South African thinking is concentrating, according to these circles, on saving lives. The most South Africa would do, it is said, is to give white Rhodesians a chance to choose whether to flee across the border or stay. If they choose to stay, according to official circles, South Africa would not act to protect them.

"It is human to hope for the best," a well-placed source said in discussing South Africa's narrow options, "because you'd rather not contemplate the alternative."

Black in Rhodesia Says Smith Remark On Talks Was a Lie

GWELO, Rhodesia, March 21 (AP)—The black nationalist leader Joshua Nkomo accused Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia today of lying when he said that Britain had advised Mr. Nkomo what terms to demand in the constitutional talks that collapsed last week.

Mr. Nkomo said in a statement after a daylong meeting of the 33-member central committee of the African National Council, which he heads, that by making the claim at a news conference yesterday Mr. Smith had told a "deliberate political lie."

The policy of one man, one vote is well known in Rhodesia, Mr. Nkomo said, and is constitutional settlement detained in the basic principles of all nationalist organizations that he has led.

"How can we be said to have been advised by somebody about our own policy?" he said. "This is absurd and a deliberate insult to us."

"This lie, which must have shocked even Smith's colleagues who were present at the talks can only do harm to Smith himself," Mr. Nkomo said. "It ruins his integrity and credibility."

Mr. Smith said yesterday that he would continue to seek a constitutional settlement despite the breakdown of negotiations. He also called on Britain to play a direct role in resolving the Rhodesia crisis.

The Air Force seismic station, outside Chiang Mai in northern Thailand, monitored earth tremors and underground nuclear tests in China and Soviet Siberia.

Most of the data obtained from these operations, particularly troop movements in Thailand's Communist neighbors, were relayed to the Thai supreme command. This explains in part the opposition of the Thai military to the American military withdrawal.

The decision was made, according to the Prime Minister, because of failure to agree after a year of detailed negotiations on the status of American forces in Thailand and a refusal by the United States to relinquish the diplomatic immunity now held by many of its military personnel, particularly at the intelligence installations.

The only concession apparently made by the Thai Government, according to senior Thai officials, was to allow the United States four months to dismantle the equipment and remove its personnel. The United States was reported to have asked six months.

It was this four-month concession that touched off the demonstrations here by the National Student Center of Thailand—a leftist body representing the majority of Thai university students. The students asserted that four months was unnecessary and could be a strategem by the present caretaker Government to allow the American military presence to continue.

The theory, given some credence by Western diplomats here, was that the next government, to be chosen in national elections April 4, will repudiate

Ban on Jewish Prayer at Temple Mount Upheld

Special to The New York Times
TEL AVIV, March 21 — The Supreme Court in Jerusalem today upheld the authority of the police to ban Jewish prayer on a sacred hilltop where Moslem shrines stand over the ruins of King Solomon's Temple.

The decision by a panel of three justices reaffirms a 1970 decision by five justices. It was particularly relevant today because Moslems have been protesting for three weeks in protest against a lower court's decision stating that Jews could not be prevented from praying on the Temple Mount.

The first Arab reaction to the latest development was voiced by Mayor Elias Friej of Bethlehem, who said the judgment was tardy but good. "It will quieten the anxiety of people about the religious holy places," he said.

Israeli High Court Backs 1970 Ruling as Arabs Riot Over Rights in Sacred Area

The ruling was in response to a request by Rudolf Cohen of Jerusalem, an immigrant from Denmark, for an order requiring Police Minister Shlomo Hille to permit him to visit the Temple Mount.

Mr. Cohen said he had been ordered to leave when he approached the Moors Gate to the Temple Mount and told the policemen on guard that he had come to pray. When he refused to leave, he was arrested.

He contended his freedom of religion had been infringed and the law protecting holy places violated. That law, enacted after Israel captured the Old City of Jerusalem from the Jordanians in 1967, guarantees freedom of access to members of different religions to places sacred to them.

Government regulations permit Jews to enter the Temple Mount but not to hold prayer services, owing to the sensitivity of the area and the strong feeling it might arouse among Moslems.

The Jewish religious establishment forbids setting foot on the former temple ground because of its sanctity. However, some religious scholars maintain it is permissible to walk in areas of the Temple Mount where the temple itself could not have stood.

Eight young Jews who held a prayer meeting on the mount last year and sang Hebrew patriotic songs were arrested and brought to trial. They were acquitted by Magistrate Ruth Or, who attacked the Government's policy.

The Arabs protested violently. Israelis said the Arab protests were contrived because the authority of the police to prevent Jewish prayers was never in dispute. State Attorney Gabriel Bach said the only issue in the lower court had been whether the youths could be punished under criminal law for breaches of the peace. Today's ruling was seen as underlining that position.

RUSSIANS DEPLORE RUPTURE BY EGYPT

MOSCOW, March 21 (Reuters) — The Soviet press charged today that President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt had decided to abrogate a friendship treaty with the Soviet Union in return for financial aid from the United States and Saudi Arabia.

The Communist Party daily Pravda said that many Arab newspapers took the line that Egypt's move was a condition for aid from the United States and "reactionary regimes of the Arabian peninsula."

A long commentary in the farming newspaper Selskaya Zhizn said that Egypt was paying a dear political price for the aid in rupturing ties with those who had helped it in the past.

"In this context one cannot fail to mention the fact that the decision to terminate the Soviet-Egyptian treaty was taken by Sadat after Washington promised to give Egypt $695 million economic aid this year and shortly after Sadat made a trip to Saudi Arabia, where he was given a subsidy of $300 million," the newspaper said.

Pravda said that the United States was in no hurry to reward President Sadat, and that the "Zionist lobby" in Washington was even opposing the sale to Egypt of six transport planes.

POLITICAL KILLINGS IN ARGENTINA RISE

40 Are Slain in a Week by Rightists and Leftists in at Least Six Cities

By JUAN de ONIS
Special to The New York Times

BUENOS AIRES, March 21—Rightist and leftist groups stepped up political violence in Argentina in the last week, leaving at least 40 people dead.

Nine of the dead were police officers shot down at random from speeding cars by leftist guerrillas, who also wounded four soldiers. A civilian was killed when a bomb exploded in the parking lot of the army's General Command, wounding four colonels.

The 30 other victims were primarily students and labor delegates, kidnapped by groups of armed men in their homes or on the streets at night, and later found shot to death in isolated places.

These rightist groups, which operate in Buenos Aires, Córdoba, Rosario, Mendoza, Bahía Blanca, La Plata and other cities, are believed to have close contacts with the federal and provincial police. They sometimes identify themselves with such cryptic names as "Commandos of the American Liberation."

The Political Leanings

In some cases, the members of these groups have been identified with right-wing Peronist units to conflict with left-wing Peronists opposed to the Government of President Isabel Martínez de Perón. In other cases they are identified with militant anti-Communist groups in the student bodies of universities that have been purged of leftist faculty members and students.

In the event of a military coup, armed anti-Communist civilian groups are expected to be prepared to take even wider action against persons they have listed as subversives or suspected collaborators.

As a result of military and police security operations, there are now believed to be nearly 5,000 people in jail here accused of subversive crimes. Some have been convicted, but many have been held for months without trial, "at the disposal of the executive power."

High military sources said today that the commanders of the armed forces, who are reported to be on the verge of overthrowing President Perón, have approved decrees that, in the event of a coup, would establish the death penalty for subversive activities.

No Recourse to Civil Courts

These decrees would be carried out by summary military trials under the direct responsibility of local military commanders in zones declared to be in a "state of emergency." There would be no recourse to the civil courts.

There is no death penalty under Argentine law except in time of war. Most of the political killings over the last two years have been committed by rightist vigilantes in reprisal for killings by leftists.

In November, the Argentine Congress rejected a section of a bill on national security that would have given local commanders in emergency zones the right to impose the death penalty.

Whole families of suspected leftists have been wiped out by the rightist groups. Among such victims were the father, mother and sister of Federico Guillermo Baez, once a member of the Peronist youth organization. He was accused by the police of killing Col. Rafael Reyes, the commander of the army garrison in Mar del Plata.

Mr. Baez, in hiding, sent a letter to local newspapers denying that he had a hand in the killing of Colonel Reyes, and charging that rightist students from the University of La Plata were involved in the killing of his family.

A Slaying in Hospital

The son of a former rector of the University of La Plata, Maximiliano Agoglia, was shot to death Friday by armed men and his home was destroyed by a bomb. Early today four armed and masked men entered the municipal hospital in Bahía Blanca and shot to death Nestor del Rio, an employee at the National University of Bahía Blanca. He was under treatment for injuries suffered when he was beaten by other men.

Mendoza, Mario Jorge Susso, a 27-year-old engineering student at a technical university, and Susana Mermejillo de Carrizo, 24, the wife of an oil company employee who was a member of the Communist Party, were kidnapped and shot to death.

British Find Bomb Factory

LONDON, March 21 (AP)—Scotland Yard's antiterrorism squad announced today that it had found a second Irish guerrilla bomb factory and detained five men and a woman. The seizure of explosives, detonators and other bomb-making materials in a house at Laverder Hill in south London came Friday night, two days after the discovery of a bomb factory in a nearby neighborhood, Scotland Yard said.

Libya Expels Tunisians

TRADE PANELS INTO A SNAG

at Geneva Stumble Negotiation Plan

11 TO THE NEW YORK TIMES
 Z.A. March 21 — The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development was unable to agree on a special two-week session on a program of negotiations for promoting the growth of the world's developing countries.

A 3-member board met separately today after abortive efforts to reach "agreed conclusions" that would serve as a basis for negotiations at the assembly at Nairobi, beginning on May 5.

Corea of Sri Lanka, secretary general of the organization, expressed the hope that the board's meeting that would serve as a "pre-negotiation." Concrete proposals would be prepared for the assembly, where the discussions will range over a long period, financial and technical assistance of special concern to developing countries.

On behalf of the industrialized countries, Hortensius of the Philippines, president of the board, said that the gap between the rich and the poor countries at the session "unfortunately led to no significant results."

Proposals contained in the program for the conference, which the industrialized countries had prepared in the month, had received criticisms and observations that were often unrelenting, he said in reproaching the industrialized countries.

As an exception of Norway, the Netherlands, these countries were unwilling to commit themselves in any way to the proposed "integrated" program for insuring the developing lands from the effects of raw materials price fluctuations, he said.

He has proposed the creation of a $6 billion common fund to finance the operation of a stock program to stabilize prices of basic commodities. The fund would buy up and store commodities in times of surplus and release them in times of shortage.

Industrialized countries are still at this time in a negotiating posture, several Westerners said privately.

Nevertheless, the Netherlands is pushing for a separate standard market in the European Community, and they said they were not prepared to participate in a common commodities fund.

VITSYN BIDS USE CAUTION

11 TO THE NEW YORK TIMES
 March 21—Aleksandr Vitsyn, the exiled Russian and political dissident, said today that he had more freedom in the Soviet Union than he had in Spain for 10 years, according to a television program and spoke in most without interruption three quarters of an hour.

Vitsyn, who has been in Zurich, blamed the death of the Russian and dissident in Spain who committed suicide.

Seen traveling for 10 years, nobody knew he could observe with freedom, he said. "I am free," he said. "I am free you an example of a personally experienced Spaniard has to be free to a particular place where he would like to live. Citizens cannot be free in their own country. We are tied to our country. It is the local authorities who decide if one can be free."

Report on China Ported Given to Ford

11 TO THE NEW YORK TIMES
 March 21—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger received a written report from President Richard Nixon about his recent trip to China, Time magazine reports in its current issue, out today.

Nixon indicated in his report that Chairman Mao Tse-tung had invited him as a guest of honor at a state dinner in Beijing. The United States remains in a counter-offensive against Russia, Time said. It cited the Nixon report as "sensational" in light of the fact that the former president spent about 10 hours with Prime Minister Hua Guofeng and an hour and 40 minutes with the chairman.

Time magazine said that Mr. Nixon's figure was "an optimistic view of U.S.-China relations," and that Kissinger termed the Nixon report "generally helpful."

Nature lover that I am, the irregular shapes of semi-precious stones and shells are pure artistry. Nothing quite like them to transform my island into a place in the sun. Clam shell necklace, chunks of carnelian and agate with a fan shell pendant, $20. Multi-colored agate and semi-precious stones on a 28-inch long necklace, 22.50.

"She sells sea shells" ... I couldn't resist that one. Nor could I resist adding to my collection now that summer is a few freckles away. Short pink or snow-white agate necklace, 12.50. Mother-of-pearl beads with wood barrel and cone shell pendant, 16.50. The most natural scarf to swath my head — S.F.A.'s ivory silk square, $40.

Ever since I can remember, I've loved collecting shells. Their natural shapes and subtle tones give me great pleasure, on and off my body. # Margaret Accused of Neglecting Duty; Sympathy Over Marriage Rift Wanes

By BERNARD WEINRAUB
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, March 21—After an initial wave of sympathy for Princess Margaret, the breakup of her marriage to Lord Snowdon stirred sharp criticism today for the first time.

The criticisms—in the widely read popular Sunday press—raised blunt questions about whether her restless life was compatible with royal family traditions.

"The public has the right to question whether Princess Margaret is setting the sort of example expected from British royalty," The Sunday People, which has a largely working-class readership of more than four million, said in a front-page editorial.

Salary Is Questioned

"If her private life isn't going to measure up to the royal standard, wouldn't she be well advised to withdraw entirely from the royal family business?" the newspaper said.

"The royals are hard workers, but Princess Margaret has for the past few years been one of the least active members of the family."

"To be frank, she hasn't earned her £35,000 a year," the newspaper added, referring to her state allowance of $70,000.

Another highly popular newspaper, The Sunday Mirror, which also has a mass readership of trade unionists and working-class families, said that Princess Anne had quietly borne the brunt of Princess Margaret's royal duties, and said:

"It is essence Margaret will have to make it abundantly clear to everyone that she is willing to turn her back on the frivolous, often bordering on irresponsible, social set which has fascinated her for so long."

Impact of the News

After more than a week of rumors, it was announced on Friday that the 45-year-old Princess and 46-year-old Lord Snowdon were separating after 16 years of marriage. An official statement said that there were no plans for divorce.

Initial reaction—from the Church of England, friends of the family and the so-called "quality press"—expressed broad sympathy for the couple and their two children, Viscount Linley, 14, and 11-year-old Lady Sarah Armstrong-Jones. Moreover, the reaction made it clear that the separation, which was expected, did not carry the same ring of scandal that followed the last major royal crisis, the abdication of Margaret's uncle, King Edward VIII, in 1936 to marry Wallis Warfield Simpson, the Duchess of Windsor, who had been divorced.

One reason for the muted reaction was that Margaret is only fifth in line to the throne. A second reason was that separation and divorce are now far more commonplace.

But by today it was evident that the royal family was deeply upset at the separation and that Princess Margaret's freewheeling life had touched a sensitive nerve in Britain, a nation engulfed in the worst inflation in Europe and plagued by economic problems.

Princess Margaret's widely publicized compassion recently has been 28-year-old Roderick Llewellyn, a graduate of socially prestigious Eton. He lives in a 30-bedroom manor house in the hamlet of Grittleton, Wiltshire, which is run as a commune—in which he is head gardener—and where he has entertained Princess Margaret. They have also been photographed together, dressed casually, at Princess Margaret's $60,000 villa in the Caribbean Island of Moustique.

Snowdon 'Desperately Sad'

What has further shaken the royal family—and chilled public reaction to Princess Margaret—was Lord Snowdon's brief television statement in Australia that was seen across Britain. Lord Snowdon, in Australia for an exhibition of his photographs, seen on the verge of tears.

He said that he was "desperately sad" at the breakup, asked for "understanding" from the two children and wished Princess Margaret "every happiness in the future." Lord Snowdon said, in conclusion, that he wanted "to express with the utmost humility my love, admiration and respect I will always have for her sister, her mother and, indeed, her entire family."

A court official was quoted today as saying: "It's all been a terrible tragedy. We can only hope and pray that Princess Margaret will, of her own volition, decide to return to the fold because her services are badly needed."

These services involve a steady round of travel around the country, speeches, charity benefits and openings.

Should Princess Margaret "opt out" and renounce her title, it would mean the loss of her $70,000 state allowance and numerous other privileges, including residence at Kensington Palace.

One of the advantages to Princess Margaret of a legal separation, rather than divorce, is less pressure on her to renounce her title. Divorce is said to be anathema to the Queen and the Church of England. At the end of two years the law would allow the marriage to be brought to an end, provided both parties are willing. After five years of legal separation, one of the parties can successfully file for divorce without the consent of the other.

Although the reasons for the separation are essentially unclear, it has been ascribed, in large part, to the contrasting life styles of the couple. Lord Snowdon was said to be unhappy with court life, sought to work as a serious photographer, and surrounded himself with men and women in the theater, movies and the arts.

Princess Margaret, on the other hand, was more at home in social circles and what has been termed the "Margaret set," with an aging group of aristocrats whose prominence flickered with Margaret's, in the early 1960's.

Perhaps the most unusual—and stinging—assessments of Margaret and the royal family came today from The Sunday Telegraph, a powerful and traditional right-wing supporter of the royal family. An article on the breakup of Margaret and Lord Snowdon, formerly Anthony Armstrong-Jones, said: "At about the time they married, British royalty was undergoing a crisis of unpopularity. The Queen herself was accused of being stuffy and out of touch. In that respect, things have wonderfully improved, not least because she has shown that the House of Hanover is capable of laughing at itself."

"The Queen Mother retained affection while keeping the royal distance. Princess Anne has stayed with the horsey set, made a dull marriage. Nobody minds. Prince Charles is still in the making. So, the theory runs, the Snowdons had a unique chance to back the Queen and Prince Philip by using their influence and interests to do some bridge-building between royalty and the outside world in a way the palace could not match. That must have put an intolerable strain on the life style they both seemed to want."

The Telegraph said that Princess Margaret's future is now "in urgent need of a rescue operation."

"Sixteen years ago the talk was all about getting him a job," the newspaper said. "It ought to be about getting her one now."

Today, W & J Sloane opens a permanent tapestry gallery on the Third Floor with over 100 examples of rare designs by the famous J. Pansu of Paris. About twenty adaptations of the museum originals are on display for your viewing pleasure. Their values range from $300. to $2500.

Soviet women looking at kitchen in U.S. home exhibit

Soviet Kitchen Debates Yield Odd Views of U.S.

By DAVID E. SHIPLER

MINSK, U.S.S.R. — Once again, American kitchens display in the Soviet Union have become the scenes of debate, and the confrontations—this time between young Americans and ordinary Soviet citizens—have revealed the extent to which Soviet perceptions of the United States are permeated by bizarre images and caricatures, despite détente.

Like the famous Nixon-Khrushchev kitchen debate of 1959, these have taken place in an exhibition sponsored by the United States Information Agency, titled "Technology for the American Home" and containing model rooms, new building materials and labor-saving gadgets, it is closing now after traveling to six Soviet cities in 15 months, the longest run of any American exhibition in the Soviet Union so far.

Aside from the dishwashers and the sofa-beds, the greatest attractions have clearly been the 22 Russian-speaking American guides. They have been bombarded with questions and drawn into discussions that have provided abundant documentation of Soviet propaganda about American life.

U.S. Life Seems Anarchical
"They think there are only fat capitalists and unemployed, that everybody lives either in 80 story high-rises or out in the country without electricity," said Dolores Harrod, one of the guides.

"When you tell them 72 percent of the people have their own homes, this blows their minds—they can't handle it. American life seems anarchical to them—sick people dying in the streets because they can't afford hospitals, people running around with guns like the Wild West," she said.

"One woman asked me, 'Why are you American women so thin?' and another said, 'Because food is so expensive they can't afford to buy it.' After months of this, the guides say it is usually easy to differentiate between honest questions and organized heckling, between plain misconceptions and harassment by agitators trying to disrupt any serious conversation that offers positive views of America.

No Heckling Elsewhere
According to Frank A. Ursino, the exhibition's director, hardly any such heckling occurred in Baku, Tashkent, Leningrad, Moscow or Zaporozhye. But he and the guides said it had been thick in Minsk, where they have seen the same people often meet in the middle of the exhibition and then fan out to various displays.

"A guy comes up and asks you six questions in a minute so you can't answer, then says, 'Come on, stop the bull—you've got all these problems, show us your problems,'" said Thomas Robertson, a 25-year-old Princeton graduate who has completed graduate work in international studies at Johns Hopkins.

"You have people who will ask you three or four questions and you start to answer and they walk away," he said. Or the agitator will interrupt a discussion about life in the United States to ask narrow questions about a toilet on display until the crowd gets bored and disperses.

"They try to prevent any information from getting across," said John Herbst, another guide. "If they can't challenge us, they'll challenge their own people. One woman asked me about unemployment benefits; an agitator said to the woman, 'Why do you ask this question?' The woman left." The questions do get asked, though, and Mr. Robertson estimates that only about 20 percent of the questions have concerned the exhibition. Most deal with prices, salaries, un-

Scholars, Meeting in Toronto, Troubled on India

SPECIAL TO THE NEW YORK TIMES
TORONTO, March 21—Concern over the political trends in India has been expressed here by prominent specialists in Indian affairs at the 28th annual meeting of the Association for Asian Studies.

About 2,000 professors and others from universities and scholarly organizations in the United States, Canada and other countries are attending the three-day discussions.

Expansion of the centrally controlled police, a paramilitary force, to 600,000 has made it unnecessary for Prime Minister Indira Gandhi to risk "politicizing" the military by using the army to maintain internal order, said Prof. Myron Weiner of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The strengthening of domestic intelligence services, and making them responsible to the Prime Minister's office, made possible the thousands of arrests immediately upon the declaration of the emergency last June, Professor Weiner declared.

Meanwhile, he said, the Youth Congress, led by the Prime Minister's younger son, Sanjay, has undercut the strength of militant Indian Marxists among the disaffected young, including a hoodlum element that now follows the Government instead of the Communists.

Institutions once employed to implement the policies of a parliamentary democracy have been "not destroyed, but strengthened," to enforce the authoritarian emergency measures, Professor Weiner declared.

Spain, Under Pressure, Acts Slowly on Changes

PEKING FINDS A LACK IN ARABIC ALPHABET

By Henry Giniger
 MADRID, March 21—Of seven proposed measures to change the political and social face of Spain, the three-month-old Government has acted on four, and only one of those is in effect.

The Government, which outlined its plan of political changes in January, has been caught in a crossfire of criticism from groups to its left that term its performance inadequate and fear it is undermining the political and social system set up by Franco.

The only one of the seven measures that is now in effect is a decree limiting last summer's anti-terrorism law, which had provisions for summary legal action and punishment against such a wide variety of dissidence that it posed a threat to all opposition activity.

Three of the proposed measures—on the right of assembly, the right of association and a restriction on the right of authorities to declare assemblies and associations illegal—have been approved for action in Parliament.

Three other measures are under study. They would transform the Parliament into a bicameral legislature, reorganize the state-run labor syndicates and set out the mode of elections and how parties—which have been illegal—would compete in them.

The first of the three bills approved for action by Parliament would limit the sweeping powers that the government has enjoyed to suppress the right of assembly. Until now any gathering of more than 20 persons has been subject to official regulation and authorization.

Under the proposed measure, the organizers of an indoor meeting would theoretically no longer need permission but would have only to notify the governor of the province three days in advance, specifying when, where and for what and the meeting is to be held.

The Governor may ask for more information if he has a "reasonable doubt" of the legality of the gathering, a stipulation that implies power to forbid it.

In the case of open-air meetings, permission must be requested 10 days in advance, so impromptu demonstrations of protest are precluded. If the governor has given no answer within five days, his silence is assumed to mean consent.

The second measure, on the right of association, would open the way for the formation of political parties outside the control of the National Movement, the Fascist-inspired political framework set up under Franco after the Civil War of 1936-39.

The first Government of Prime Minister Carlos Arias Navarro, and the last under Franco, devised an association law that gave the movement the power to approve and supervise all political associations, which, in turn, had to swear fidelity to its principles.

Such a restriction doomed the measure from the start because only those groups faithful to the regime were willing to accept it. The opposition continued to be left out in the cold.

Under the new bill, the Ministry of the Interior would give authorization for a party, and its decisions could be appealed to a special court called the Tribunal of Guarantees. The National Movement would thus presumably cease to have any precise function or place in political life.

Communist Party Barred
 Groups that would be barred are those that seek to establish a totalitarian regime, that endanger the sovereignty, integrity, independence or security of the nation, that use violence or subversion or that are contrary to public morals. This would preclude, in particular, the Communist Party and other extreme Marxist groups and separatist groups like the Basque organization E.T.A.

Groups would not have to have a minimum number of members distributed over a minimum number of provinces, as under the old law, and could thus be formed on a regional basis.

The third measure concerns changes in the penal code as a necessary legal complement to the bills on assembly and association. The present vaguely worded code gives the government sweeping and arbitrary powers such as Article 172, which says, in part, that illegal associations are "those prohibited by the competent authority."

Such associations include, for example, those that seek to destroy or weaken "national sentiment" or seek to implant a regime based on the division of Spaniards into political or class groups of whatever kind.

Although the changes have not been specified as yet, the new code would be more specific and less arbitrary and restrictive.

Bicameral Legislature Planned
 Three major measures are still to come. One concerns the transformation of the present Parliament into a bicameral legislature. It is presumed that the lower house will be elected by universal suffrage but this is not certain. The upper house may incorporate the National Movement as a way of insuring its survival.

The second measure concerns reorganization of the present state-run syndicate organization in which workers and employers are joined under government control. The plan is to for 40 years in danger of destruction.

The powerful and influential representative organizations of free government control.

The third contemplated change is an electoral law setting out the mode of elections system, and how parties would compete in them.

Government opponents on the left and in the center are critical of the whole program because those changes already drawn up contain restrictions and allow the government less freedom to exercise arbitrary will; because the measures have eroded the bases of the regime; and because they are uncertain in nature and timing.

The right, on the other hand, fears the system it supported is not

PEKING (Agence France-Presse) — The Chinese have found that the intricacies of the Arabic alphabet slow down the development of the revolution and the building of socialism.

Hsinhua, the official Chinese press Agency, reported on the Latinization of the Uighur and Kazakh languages in Sinkiang, a Chinese autonomous region on the Soviet frontier.

"The old Uighur and Kazakh scripts, based on the Arabic alphabet, were very hard to learn, write and use," Hsinhua said they did not correspond with the need to develop the revolution and build socialism.

The agency continued: "The people of the various nationalities ardently desired a reform of those languages. Speaking in concrete terms, they were hoping for the Latinization of the old Uighur and Kazakh languages."

Reagan Virtually Concedes Defeat in North Carolina

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON

ASHEVILLE, N. C., March 21—Ronald Reagan virtually conceded here today that he would lose the North Carolina Republican primary on Tuesday, but he said that another loss would not doom his candidacy.

Asked where he could expect to recover, Mr. Reagan specifically cited only the Texas primary on May 1 and the California primary on June 8. He repeated his contention that he would be a stronger contender in the South and the Southwest.

Brown Bets on California In Thrust for Nomination

Senator Church, on Coast, Sets a Long-Shot Gamble

By LINDA CHARLTON

ANGELES, March 21—A campaign is only starting to find its shape. He said, "we're still lifting it off the ground."

In the crucial, population-heavy southern section of the state, the coordinator is Michael Novelli, a San Francisco-based professional political consultant, who is as frank as almost everyone else in the campaign about its riskiness. But Mr. Novelli sees two large "natural" Church constituencies here. They are the elderly, in whose behalf Mr. Church has been active as a Senator, and the liberal political activists who he feels have not thus far become excited about any of the other candidates.

One of the other Democratic candidates amasses a leading lead—or even a full win in the Wisconsin primary April 6 and does not drop out or, think very hard about going to sources close to one candidate emerging in the primaries and for Church does well late contests he has and if the national on bogs down in fratricide, his admittedly very could succeed.

Coast Democrats Play Down Controversy in Platform Proposals

By LES LEBETTER

SAN FRANCISCO, March 21—Ghosts of the 1972 Presidential campaign seemed to haunt the final meeting here yesterday of the California Democratic Party Commission on Platform and Policy.

The bitter personal and ideological in-fighting that are said to have alienated voters that year were mentioned by 30 party regulars assigned to work out the final statement. The state party wants incorporated in the national Democratic Party platform later this spring.

There was an obvious effort, therefore, to avoid provocative words and phrases even when describing the controversial position arrived at through months of public hearings by commission subcommittees.

For instance, although the disabled, the elderly and American Indians; for youth, women, veterans and homosexuals, and desegregate for all ethnic, racial and social minorities.

The commissioners were obviously aware of the dangers in attempting to establish principles for the party without provoking ideological battles that might cost the party's presidential nominee a victory in November.

"Democrats have to show they can be orderly," said Representative Yvonne Brathwaite Burke in an opening statement to the commission on which she is co-chairman. "We must not be afraid that, in an attempt to have order, we have to give up our position."

Then they carefully proceeded to debate the plank that supports equal rights for the remained a commitment to far-reaching change. The public safety and law enforcement plank called for the banning of pistols through national policy on the prevention of the proliferation of handguns" despite the recognition, according to the Los Angeles City Attorney, Burt Pines, that this "could be a sensitive problem because it provokes such a voluble minority."

That plank also opposed the death penalty and called for increased prosecution of those involved in white-collar and organized crime; the reorientation of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration away from equipment purchases and crime-prevention programs, and a study of so-called victimless crimes and of laws against such crimes.

The economic plank called for full employment, price controls, "vigorous antitrust" action, support for small businesses and "a simple, fair and equitable Federal tax system based on ability to pay" that would lower tax rates by eliminating most exemptions, deductions and tax credits.

The agriculture plank called for the encouragement of small farms and supported the unionization of farm workers. It also recommended the preservation of agricultural land and planning "to meet domestic and world needs for food and fiber without having adverse effect on the American consumer."

Inserted in the foreign policy plank were statements calling for the withdrawal of all outside forces from Ireland and the development of an African policy that encouraged majority rule and opposed apartheid.

Rep. Dellums Rejects Third-Party Draft; Black Convention Still Plans to Name a Candidate

By THOMAS A. JOHNSON

CINCINNATI, March 21

Representative Ronald V. Dellums, Democrat of California, refused last night to be drafted as the Independent Freedom Party's candidate for President but leaders of the National Black Political Convention said today that the party would still be formed and that they would "definitely run a black candidate for President this year."

after Mr. Dellums turned down the nomination. Mr. Dellums said he declined to say who the convention's political candidate would be, but organizational development committee told newsmen that Dick Gregory, the comedian and civil rights activist, led a field that included Mayor Richard G. Hatcher of Gary, Ind., Representative John Conyers, Democrat of Michigan, State Senator Bill Owens of Massachusetts, and Barbara Sizemore, an educator in Washington.

Mr. Dellums' refusal meant that state chairmen and the executive council members of the National Black Political Assembly would have to meet and choose the candidate, Mr. Mtangulizi said, adding that the

Other sources within the assembly, which ended its four-day conference here early today, have said that both men encouraged the convention planners but backed out because of stronger commitments to the Democratic Party. Newsmen who called Mr. Dellums' office last Thursday were told that the Representative was "leaning toward" accepting the draft, but those who called he next day were told that he was considering the convention's advocacy of a "black agenda," Mr. Dellums said today as they left for home.

Both Mr. Mtangulizi and Ron Daniels, chairman of the assembly, said they were not aware of this charge of saying they were interested and then backing down," asked Preston Wilcox, a swift and confused vote, as the convention was adjourned, called for the delegates to continue seeking to draft Mr. Dellums. But this was reversed during the many state caucuses and executive sessions that continued through the night. Mr. Dellums had been greeted with a loud and enthusiastic demonstration, and a feeling of despair and anger came over many of the participants, who had believed that the convention would give them a Presidential candidate of their own choosing.

Many continued in that mood as they left for home. "Why did they put us through this charade of saying they were interested and then backing down?" asked Preston Wilcox, a New York delegate and the director of AFRAM, a black-oriented publishing organization. "We were here to elect leaders, to hand them the mantles earned through our struggles by Dr. Martin Luther King and Malcolm X," he continued, "but they came to us with their own personal concerns."

Perahia's Romantic Appeal

ONAL HENAHAN dream of young music to balance their on the dangerous re that runs between acclaim and elite and only a few have the talent and pull off that feat. pianists who have prominence in the perhaps none is a let to walk the line better than Murray who gave a recital Tully Hall yesterday Great Performers at Center series.

one of your nose-to-the-keys pianists, but one of the older school of sailing gazers and head tossers whose summa cum laude graduates include Arthur Schnitzler and Rudolf Serkin. Like those paragons of the piano, the dark young American has a stage manner that seems utterly natural and in tune with his musical style. Nothing about his extremely introspective playing of Haydn's Variations in F minor contradicted what the audience saw. This was marvelously limpid, deeply expressive Haydn, with formal designs plainly laid out but overbearing lines exquisitely drawn. Like the older grand masters, Mr. Perahia can play with a kind of emotional abandon that does not seem foreign to the subject, and he never steps over the trap of theatrical swooning.

Perahia produced somewhat leaner and drier sonorities than would have been ideal, particularly in the Schumann, but he never drove his playing into harshness or brittleness, as so many technically proud pianists do when they lose track of the musical point. Chopin's Sonata in B minor Op. 53, whose first movement can be made to seem prissy, had a sneaky strength throughout. There was a mobility to the opening movement, a febrile elegance to the Scherzo, a touching restraint to the Largo and a flighty brilliance to the Finale that added up to an absorbing performance. Mr. Perahia began the Finale at a slow, deliberate tempo that permitted him to turn on the speed thrillingly later. He knows, as too few pianists seem to know, that clearly articulated playing at a moderate tempo can give the impression of great speed and can also allow the artist time to make expressive points. It was, all in all, a recital that should add considerably to both the popularity and the in-group stature of Mr. Perahia.

About New York

A Star Revisits Harlem

By TOM BUCKLEY

Avon Long took a fan from downtown last Friday on a walking tour of the Harlem he remembered—a kind of re-enactment by daylight of "Bubbling Brown Sugar," the revue in which he is starring.

The excursion began under the marquee of the Apollo on 125th Street, and it turned out to be a symbolically important place for Mr. Long. "I played here more times than I can count," he said, "but it was Frank Schifano, the father of the boys who owns it now, who brought me down from Boston and made me a star.

"That was in 1931 at the old Lafayette Theatre at Seventh Avenue. He was operating it then. I had two numbers. The first time I came out in work clothes and sang 'Around the Bend of the Road.' Then I changed to a tuxedo and sang and danced a song called 'Rhapsody in Rhythm.' I had spins and turns and splits that New York City had never seen before.

Mr. Long, at 66, still slim and spry, except when he is plagued by the gout, suggested with elegant fingers rather than feet his virtuosity of 45 years ago.

"The funny thing was that I had gone to Boston from Baltimore, where I was born and brought up, to study ballet," he said. "I thought I was going to be doing 'Specter of the Rose.' I told myself, 'I'm not going to shuffle. How wrong I was.'"

Mr. Long and his companion started east on 125th Street. The streets came alive under a warm sun that unmistakably heralded the coming of spring.

"I have to admit I haven't been down here in years," he said. "My wife and I live up on Riverside Drive and I'm on the road a lot. But, you know, it doesn't look so different now than it did in the 30's. At least the people don't look different. I don't see misery in their faces."

At the corner of Seventh Avenue there was a cluster of 25 or 30 white youngsters, a rare sight in Harlem these days. They turned out to be French high school students on the first day of a tour of the United States.

"You did right, coming to Harlem first," said Mr. Long, with a welcoming wave. His tan trademark beret, perched on the side of his head, gave him a jaunty, Gallic air, and the youngsters responded with smiles.

Then it was up Lenox Avenue, with wine-drinkers clustered on the cracked sidewalks and many shops boarded up.

"I take it back about the people not looking miserable," Mr. Long said, shaking his head.

He turned west on 132d Street to Seventh Avenue. "And here's the Lafayette Theatre, where I started," he said. "Now it's a church. Maybe the people are better off that way, but I'm not so sure."

Next to the theater stands a shabby bar at the corner of 131st Street.

"This used to be Connie's Inn," Mr. Long said. "You could duck out the stage door of the Lafayette into Connie's. Great music, great people. You know, I had a letter last week from Sol Immerman, who owned Connie's. God, he must be old."

Now. He said he couldn't wait to see "Brown Sugar."

Mr. Long noticed a signpost on the corner, in Harlem, the name of Seventh Avenue has been changed to Adam Clayton Powell Jr. Boulevard, in honor of the late Congressman.

"Isn't that dignified," he said with amused irony. "I hadn't seen it before you know. Back when I was living here, we used to call this 'Promenade Avenue.' You wouldn't even go out to the grocery store if you weren't dressed up. If people saw you wearing something shabby, they'd talk about you like a dog."

Always the performer, Mr. Long bore down on the last word, roughening and darkening it until it sounded the way an old down-home mongrel looks.

"Down the street there used to be a place called the Rendezvous," he said. "People used to stand outside the door to hear the show for nothing. I did a song there once called 'Brown Boy'—it's in the show now—and if I didn't sing it, they'd hang on the walls until I did."

"What the hell's that doing there?" Mr. Long said, walking up to it. Then he spotted a worn bronze plaque imbedded in the concrete. He rubbed its inscription clear with a moistened finger.

"I thought this was the place," he said. "This is where the Three of Hope stood, where all the black performers used to congregate, hoping for a job."

He continued across the street to the Club Baron for a drink. "If you sit here long enough you can buy anything from a needle to a diesel engine," he said. "You could find yourself buying back the same radio someone stole from you."

No sooner had he said it that a man came in hawking irregularly acquired yard goods. He was soon followed by a man with a suitcase full of camera lenses and small appliances.

"See, what did I tell you," he said, laughing.

Returning to the street, walking north, Mr. Long recalled that the Cotton Club, the entertainment mecca for white people in the 1930's, had stood at 142d Street and Seventh. Not far away was the Savoy Ballroom. He stopped once again, at Jock's Place, for another drink.

"The reason this place is so fancy and quiet is that it's just around the corner from Stivers' Row," he said. "Come on, I'll show you where I used to live."

The Row is 139th Street, west of Seventh. Forty years ago, when well-off blacks could not hope to own a house in the suburbs, they aspired instead to have one of the buff brick mansions there; hence the name.

"Fletcher Henderson lived right next-door to me," Mr. Long said. "Chick Webb was across the street."

He paused in front of No. 228. Its brass and paint and metal work were immaculate. A physician's shingle gleamed alongside the door.

"Good for Dr. Jenkins, whoever he is," said Avon Long approvingly. "His sure keeping it looking nice."

GRETA GARBO, normally camera-shy, posed for this photograph by her friend, Count Carl Johan Bernadotte, in Sweden last summer. The actress is 70 years old.

Music: 'Three Pieces'

By JOHN ROCKWELL

Yesterday afternoon's unusually enjoyable American Symphony Orchestra concert in Carnegie Hall had three main items of interest—a New York premiere, the appearance of an excellent young German pianist and Tchaikovsky's "Manfred," which is always a pleasure to encounter.

The premiere was of Robert Hall Lewis's "Three Pieces." Mr. Lewis lives in Baltimore, where Sergiu Comissiona, the guest conductor of the program, conducts the orchestra. His pieces were each very short, recalling Western European miniature forms and some curious mixture of Berg and Kodaly in their expressive and their brightly colored orchestral garb. This was perfect new music for a conservative symphony audience; dissonant enough to sound serious, dated enough for familiarity and short enough to pay token heed to new music without taxing anyone's patience.

Justus Franz, the pianist, made his debut here last year with Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic in the Dvorak Concerto, which they subsequently recorded. Yesterday's was his second appearance here, to be followed tomorrow night by his New York recital debut at Alice Tully Hall.

His account of the Mozart concerto in D minor (K. 468) was interesting: big-toned and unornamented, yet mellow and never blatantly anachronistic. Mr. Frantz dominated the proceedings, even with Mr. Comissiona's shaping a crisp, plush, string-heavy accompaniment, and the performance flowed purposefully and even powerfully along.

Mr. Comissiona's work throughout the concert was impressive, beginning with the lively, controlled account of Berlioz's "Cosaire" Overture and ending with "Manfred." This is surely one of Tchaikovsky's very finest works, full of the most delicate effects and a throbbing Romanticism so overt that it simply defies bathos, even with the church organ at the end.

Mr. Comissiona's interpretation lacked the flat-out energy that some conductors and orchestras bring to this music, and it was a pity he abbreviated the last movement, even if that is standard practice. But otherwise nearly everything was positive, the music molded with an altogether convincing sympathy for its varied moods and the orchestra playing with precision and sensitivity.

Concert: Amici Quartet

By ALLEN HUGHES

The Amici Quartet, one of a family of recently organized string ensembles nurtured by the Young Artist Program at the State University of New York at Binghamton, made its New York City debut at Carnegie Recital Hall on Saturday night under the sponsorship of Artist Development Inc., a Binghamton-based nonprofit organization.

The Amici members—Bruce Berg and Cordula Rosow, violinists; John Dexter, violist; and Stephen Stalker, cellist—are all alumni of either the Juilliard School or the Manhattan School of Music.

Their program consisted of Marc Neikrug's Quartet (1972), Schoenberg's Quartet No. 2 and Beethoven's Quartet in E flat (Op. 74), and Neva Pigrim, soprano, was guest soloist in the songs that constitute the two final movements of the Schoenberg work.

The interpretations of the 20th-century compositions were very good. The young players were clearly comfortable with the stylistic and expressive demands of these pieces, and they moved through them with expertise and authority that commanded attention and respect.

The Amici's Beethoven performance was less assured, less satisfying. It brought some intonation problems and instances in which the players seemed not to have decided exactly what they were going to make of various transitional passages or parts of the score that are ambiguous in implication. Their Beethoven was not bad; it was simply not at the level of their accomplishments with other works.

Mrs. Pigrim sang with her usual concern for diction, and artistic integrity. She pushed her voice into some hard-unsurety fortis in the process, but the general effect of her performance was positive.

Ophof and Flagello In Debuts at Met In a Fine 'Puritani'

The Metropolitan Opera mustered a full-throated quartet of principals for its handsome new production of "I Puritani" earlier this month. Saturday evening the two leading members of the cast were on hand, with Joan Sutherland sounding superb and looking wonderful in Peter J. Hall's costumes and Luciano Pavarotti singing better than this observer had ever heard him before.

But the other two principals were new, and neither matched his predecessor. Cornelius Ophof made his Met debut as Riccardo, replacing Sherrill Milnes, and Ezio Flagello, singing his first Giorgio with the company, stood in for James Morris.

Mr. Ophof was born in Rotterdam but moved to Canada in 1949 and was trained in Toronto. He is a good-looking man on stage; his diction is excellent, his phrasing sensitive and to the point. However, for the Met, and particularly in a context like Saturday's, he doesn't seem to have enough voice. His baritone is solid, a little throaty and not particularly large, with a decent but not extensive range—the high G at the end of the first scene was flat, much of "Suoni le trombe" was sharp through overemphasis and although he appeared to hit the A flat at the end of the duet, Richard Bonynge, the conductor, drowned him out.

Mr. Flagello has lost much of the stentorian solidity his bass once boasted. Now he sounds short-breathed and dull, and his rather crude interpretive gifts offer little compensation.

Stage: 'Line,' a Surprising Look at Fight to Be In

Play by Horovitz Opens at 13th St. Theater

By CLIVE BARNES

There is a pleasant surprise lying in wait for people who go to Israel Horovitz's short play "Line" at the 13th Street Theater—not least for those who have seen the play in earlier manifestations—notably the major production at the Theater de Lys four or five years ago. Of course it may merely be a change of heart on the part of this critic. But I think not. The play really does look a lot better in this new and very responsive Off Broadway production. In fact it looks very good indeed.

The play is both slight and dense—a concept of playwriting that most of us find difficult to comprehend. You can see the very same idea of dramatic construction in Mr. Horovitz's other work currently playing in New York, "The Language Class." Mr. Horovitz writes in paragraphs, instead of taking a story

McShann, Williams, Veteran Jazzmen, Play Michael's Pub

The rollicking, pungent sound of Kansas City jazz is flooding through Michael's Pub these nights, conjured up by two lively visitors from Kansas City, Jay McShann, the pianist, and Claude Williams, the violinist.

Both are products of the glory days of jazz in Kansas City—the late 1920's and early 30's. Mr. McShann was the leader of a big band with which Charlie Parker played in the late 30's and with which he made his first records in 1941. Mr. Williams was the guitarist in the original Count Basie band that came out of Kansas City in 1938. They have been joined at Michael's Pub by Milt Hinton on bass, and Panama Francis on drums.

Mr. Williams, who occasionally played violin in his brief period as Mr. Basie's guitarist, devotes himself exclusively to the violin in his performances with Mr. McShann. He has a strong urgent attack in which he sometimes overshadows Mr. McShann with his flashiness.

But when Mr. McShann is in the mood to step out, he is not apt to be overshadowed by anyone. A huge, broad-shouldered man with pudgy fingers, he is a master of the boogie-based Kansas City blues style and a joyous, swinging attack that has traces of the uproarious spirit of Fats Waller and the complexities of Earl Hines. Mr. McShann also sings the blues in a gentle, plaintive voice that is an interesting variant of the styles of such urgent Kansas City blues shouters as Jimmy Rushing and Joe Turner.

SOLO CELLO ADDS ZIP TO A ROCK CONCERT

Unaccompanied cello solos do not ordinarily bring down the house at rock concerts, but the Electric Light Orchestra is not an ordinary rock group. Formed several years ago from the debris of the Move, a British group that was a critical favorite in the United States, Electric Light combines attractive original material with classical music. The group plays relatively straight but very loud.

The hand's string section—two cellos and a violin—is employed cleverly in the original material, which often recalls the soaring lyricism of the Beatles. But the classical bits are inevitable warhorses. During his cello solo, at the Beacon Theater, Hugh McDowell performed a ragged "Flight of the Bumblebee" and then imitated a blues band with his treble strings as lead guitar and bass strings as electric bass. The group's violin soloist managed to cram Tchaikovsky, Rimsky-Korsakov, some electronic noodling and a head-down into his solo spot.

The audience dutifully applauded each evening. At times, the proceedings seemed like a replay of a particularly British vision of the 1960's, when warmed-over oldies were regularly acclaimed as innovations.

characters, in search not of an author but of some kind of meaning. This is not an easy trick. Watching the play, you do see attitudes to the slippery pole of success very clearly delineated. And the self-destructive, and for the characters, self-congratulatory ending, does have a horrid, dangerous reality.

The play is an event of interplays—of dialogue sharpened in behavioral patterns. It has been directed by Carol Ison with an instinctive sense of pace and style, the acting was remarkably responsive to the play and its allegorical subtext. The five in line were—in first picking order—Tony DiBenedetto, Hiram Kastenburg, Jackie Maddox, Peter Victor, and Lawrence McGlade. All stood in place with impetuous despair.

Miss Ison also did a very thorough job on one-acter, "Shooting Gallery," which opened on an account of the war men and women devoted his life to a dummy bear in a gallery in order to bowl of goldfish, self-sacrificing to baby-sitting home, with a complacent male chauvinism. Male chauvinism has been more devastated in the theater.

As the somnambulant sharpshooter, I provided a model of tension, and Amir looked dimly distant young woman on shores of rape.

Herman Levin, producer of "My Fair Lady," at the St. James Theater during a rehearsal of the show

Levin Back on Street Where She Lived

RICHARD EDER
The odds against any particular play, a theatrical has to be a man believe three or four things at the time of its successful production. They are: first, the producer must have the right man behind the scenes; second, the play must be good; third, the production must be well mounted; and fourth, the timing must be right. Herman Levin, producer of "My Fair Lady," is a man who has done all four things. He has produced a play that has run in Philadelphia for 18 months, a play that has costars a man who has won a Tony Award, a play that has been produced by a man who has produced some of the most successful plays of the past few years, and a play that has been produced at a time when the theater is in a state of crisis.

month. You have to lurk around corners." Having said this, he went on to talk about the out-of-town run in Philadelphia: $89,000 the first week, $109,000 the second, $110,000 the third. "It broke the Shubert Theater record there for all time," he said. "It shows one thing: It's what a box-office treasure of mine used to tell me: 'It's the mouth-to-mouth advertising that makes a show.'" What differences did he find producing "My Fair Lady" now as compared with 20 years ago? "It costs more," he said. "Our budget is $750,000. The first time it was $360,000." Ticket prices, incidentally, have also doubled, and Mr. Levin thought that this was fair, enough. "Look at other things," he said. "Steaks up four times, subway tokens up 10 times, your newspaper up three or four times."

Levin Cancels La Scala U.S. Visit

in Government announced that it had scheduled tour in States this fall by La Scala Opera Company in April and after the Paris Opera immediately after the La Scala performances. "I don't know what we will schedule for the missing two weeks. It is too late at this stage to get another major opera company to take La Scala's place. We will have to find some suitable musical or ballet programs as replacement."

In announcing cancellation of the visit, Adolfo Sarli, Italy's Minister of Tourism and Entertainment, informed La Scala officials that the action had been taken because the budget for the visit had "substantially increased" since it was originally drawn up. "In view of this and of the country's delicate financial and economic situation, we are compelled to cancel the tour," he wrote in a letter to La Scala. "The Italian Foreign Ministry will inform American authorities about this decision."

Rothman's . . . the great Discount Men's Store for Expensive Clothing!

More Accolades for Rothman's fabulous discount values!

A MAJOR TV STATION . . . turned loose camera and crew in our establishment . . . interviewed our customers . . . and told its viewing audience that Rothman caters to men who wear expensive clothing normally selling as high as $250 . . . at tremendous discounts.

NEW YORK MAGAZINE'S GUIDE They called us the grand-daddy of the men's clothing discount field with many years' experience selling top-name hand-tailored suits.

BARGAIN FINDER This guide book by Consumers Alliance, a non-profit organization, lists Rothman as one of New York's best-dollar-value shops.

A GREAT NEWSPAPER It wrote up Rothman's album of famous customers, containing the signatures of hundreds of notables the world over.

ANOTHER GREAT NEWSPAPER It editorialized on the way inflation-weary men are turning to discount stores; with the lead paragraph devoted to Rothman's.

Above are just a few of the unsolicited, unpaid-for praises constantly bestowed on us for our fabulous discount values. Are we pleased? Of course. But our greatest satisfaction comes when a customer's eyes light up as he recognizes the expensive, national brands we carry, even with the labels removed. When a man sees a $245 suit marked $135 at Rothman's, he knows it's a $245 suit. Others proportionally priced. Special purchases of top-quality manufacturer's overproductions, plus our low mark-up policy, give our discounts a special charisma. They're the real thing! Below we've listed a handful of the thousands of exciting new fashions now on our racks. To our regular customers, praises for our superlative values come as no surprise. They know! Can you think of a more timely opportunity for you to know us, too?

Bridge: Levitt Team Leads in Final of Women's Knockout Play

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

KANSAS CITY, Mo., March 21 — A strong East Coast foursome battled the 1976 United States women's world championship team here this afternoon in the final of the first National Women's Knockout Team Championship, concluding 10 days of play in the American Contract Bridge League's Spring Nationals.

Evelyn Levitt of Wilmington, Del., Helen Smith of Philadelphia, Lila Peristean of Roanoke, L.I., and Vivian Whalen of Sea Cliff, L.I., faced Dorothy Hayden Truscott, Gail Moss, Jacqui Mitchell, all New York, Emma Jean Hawes of Fort Worth, Marilyn Johnson of Houston, and Mary Jane Farrell of Los Angeles, who will compete in Monte Carlo in May in the hope of bringing the United States its first world women's team title.

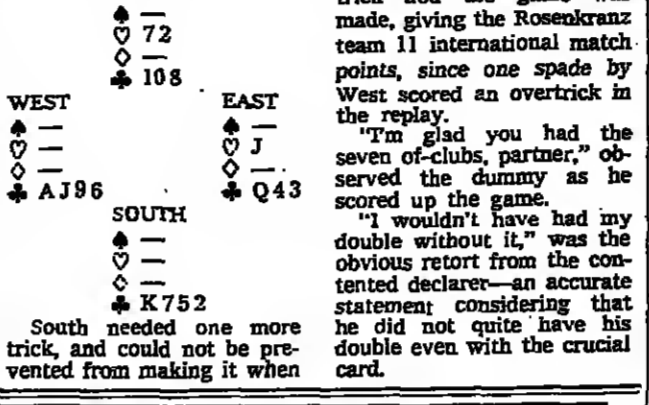

At the half-way stage in the match the Levitt team led by 7 points. The Levitt quartet scored two straight upsets, ousting the second-seeded team, a powerful group headed by Edith Kemp of Miami Beach, by 10 points in the quarter-final and then rallying in the last quarter of the semifinal to snatch a 2-point victory against the third-seeded team led by Esta Van Zandt of Houston. In the other semifinal, the Truscott team trailed by 2 points at the half-way stage against Eunice Rosen of Chicago and her team, but dominated play in the second half and won by 84 points.

Open Pair Leaders Leading the open pair championship into the final session tonight were: First, Paul Ivaska of Culver City, Calif., and Tony Kasday of Scarborough, Me., 45½ match points; second, Ernest Ivey of Colorado Springs, Colo., and Terry House of San Jose, Calif., 45½, and third, Marian Weed and Dorothy Moore of Dallas, 43½.

The most successful partnership on the national scene in recent years has been Dr. Richard Katz of Los Angeles and Larry Cohen, who won an intercollegiate title, representing the University of Wisconsin a decade ago, and have gone from strength to strength ever since. Before their success last week in retaining their Vanderbilt Knockout Team title, they had achieved the incredible feat of winning all four major national team titles in less than two years. It is a slight disappointment to them that their original hiding methods, described in queen was finessed with some confidence, since West's opening bid made it almost certain that he held the heart king. The declarer then went to work on diamonds, leading the king from dummy and dropping the eight from his hand. When West's queen appeared he continued with the seven, planning to play for the ten and nine to be on his right. East played low, and the seven won the trick.

Two more diamonds were cashed, and West was in some trouble for discards. If he had known that his partner held the club queen he could have easily parted with a card in that suit. As it was, he gave up two spades and the heart king on the diamonds. The heart discard was aimed at preventing a throw-in and did no harm. But the spade discards proved fatal. South led a spade, and West took his ace and led the heart ten. South took the ace in dummy, discarded his remaining heart on the spade queen, and reached this position:

South made one more trick, and could not be prevented from making it when he led the club ten from the dummy. If East had ducked, South would have done the same. In practice, East covered with the queen, and the king was taken with the ace. The club seven won the last trick and the game was made, giving the Rosenkranz team 11 international match points, since one spade by West scored an overtrick in the replay.

"I'm glad you had the seven-of-clubs partner," observed up the game. "I wouldn't have had my double without it," was the obvious retort from the contented declarer—an accurate statement considering that he did not quite have his double even with the crucial card.

A Clockwork Auchincloss

By CHRISTOPHER LEHMAN-HAUPT

WINTHROP COVENANT, by Louis Auchincloss, 246 pages, Houghton Mifflin, $8.95. At the good news. There are two pieces in Louis Auchincloss's collection of thematically linked stories, "The Winthrop Covenant," of them. "In the Beauty of the Lilies" was Born Across the Sea," a pillar of mid-19th-century New City society who takes it upon himself to scotch a love affair his law part-wife is about consummate.

Another, "The," involves a relationship between the artist and the lawyer, a relationship which is in conflict, in perhaps they are in worth of the admiring.

these nine variations on the thome Puritan ethic as it has manifested throughout American history from the present.

to the authorities, as a consequence of which the innocent man is lynched. The plot is as contrived as the irony is heavy. The story lacks flesh or ambiguity to muffle the ticking. Wind it up and watch it demonstrate Mr. Auchincloss's point.

And so it goes throughout most of "The Winthrop Covenant." Precisely, Mr. Auchincloss fashions every imaginable shape of the Puritan conscience—from that of the original Winthrop who founds and governs the Massachusetts Bay Colony (and exiles religious dissidents from it) in the first story, "The Covenant," to that of John Winthrop Gardiner, who serves the American war effort in Vietnam (and exiles his Army-deserter son from his affections) in the ninth and final story, "The Penultimate Puritan."

Louis Auchincloss

Mr. Auchincloss does it all—stuffy clubmen, alcoholic wives, 18th-century divines, Protestants, Catholics and Jews. But you long for the characters to drop out of the machinery. You wish that one or two of them would slip and fall on the polished dialogue, and find themselves at a loss for words or uttering ungrammatical obscenities. In short, you want the mechanism to break down.

Pursued by the Furies

again, perhaps they are not, for I news about "The Winthrop Covenant" about overwhelms the good. The bad news is that outside of two strong stories, Mr. Auchincloss's look runs too much like clockwork. He is carefully calibrated and utterly accurate. Take the collection's third story, "The Martyr," for example. This one Rebecca Winthrop Bayard, an 18th-century Hudson River and the granddaughter of, the Wait Still Winthrop, who presided Salem which trials (and whose at-to prepare himself for heaven "with-utiting that he may have erred on of harshness is the subject of the a's second story, "The Fall").

Bayard is afraid that because Salem grandfather, her children pursued by the furies. So her a Negro to play the role of a who may have been falsely accused, so that Rebecca can smuggle of New York City in her carriage that, because she has sinned a has finally exorcised "the Winth-u-s." Unhappily, Rebecca's daughter's enough of the plot to think that her's stowaway is the real fugitive, seizure of Puritan conscience goes

The Two Exceptions

What accounts then for the two exceptions to Mr. Auchincloss's slickness—the two stories that transport you beyond an awareness of the machinery the author is building? My sense is that in both "In the Beauty of the Lilies . . ." and "The Arbiter" he forgot the instructions for his larger plan and became more interested in the stories themselves. And I think he did so because in both of them he is doing what he so often does best, which is to take a character whom he secretly admires and sympathizes with and show why that character is in the wrong. (In the case of "In the Beauty of the Lilies . . ." the character is a moral prig who is covering up his love for the woman he claims to be protecting from scandal. In "The Arbiter," the hero is a dilettante who ends up doing more for the lady novelist's husband than he does for her art.)

But whatever the explanation is, the subtlety of these two stories transcends and overshadows their contribution to the scheme of "The Winthrop Covenant." And, one is grateful that they do, for everywhere else Mr. Auchincloss seems to be going through the motions.

Cuban Defector, Cited by C.I.A., Hinted Oswald Link to Havana

WASHINGTON, March 21 (AP)—A Cuban defector told the Central Intelligence Agency last year. They were later turned over to the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, which subcommittee, headed by Senator Richard S. Schweiker, Republican of Pennsylvania, was investigating the Kennedy assassination.

The defector, described as a well-placed individual who has been in contact with officers of the Cuban Directorate General of Intelligence," also told the C.I.A. that the Cuban intelligence agency took extraordinary security precautions immediately after the Kennedy slaying, according to the documents.

The information was relayed to the Warren Commission, which "saw no need to pursue this angle any further," according to the C.I.A. memorandum, written in June 1964. No mention of the defector or his information appears in the report of the commission headed by the late Chief Justice Earl Warren, which concluded that there was no evidence of a foreign or domestic conspiracy behind the assassination of President Kennedy in Dallas on Nov. 22, 1963.

Memoranda regarding the Cuban defector were among some 1,500 pages of C.I.A. memo stating that the Warren Commission should have given more credence to the possibility of a foreign conspiracy in light of promising leads that were not pursued.

The documents were originally provided to a commission headed by Vice President Rockefeller that investigated allegations of wrongdoing in the WASHINGTON, March 21 (AP)—A Cuban defector told the Central Intelligence Agency last year. They were later turned over to the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, which subcommittee, headed by Senator Richard S. Schweiker, Republican of Pennsylvania, was investigating the Kennedy assassination.

The defector, described as a well-placed individual who has been in contact with officers of the Cuban Directorate General of Intelligence," also told the C.I.A. that the Cuban intelligence agency took extraordinary security precautions immediately after the Kennedy slaying, according to the documents.

The information was relayed to the Warren Commission, which "saw no need to pursue this angle any further," according to the C.I.A. memorandum, written in June 1964. No mention of the defector or his information appears in the report of the commission headed by the late Chief Justice Earl Warren, which concluded that there was no evidence of a foreign or domestic conspiracy behind the assassination of President Kennedy in Dallas on Nov. 22, 1963.

When the information was forwarded to the Warren Commission on May 15, 1964, a memo said, "According to the source, Oswald may have been interviewed by Vega (one of the Cuban agents) on his assistant but this is strictly conjecture on his part." A June 19 memo reporting the commission's decision not to pursue the lead, any further said that the defector had "no information linking (Oswald) to the Cuban intelligence services in any manner."

On the West Bank...

Israel's nine-year administration of the Jordan West Bank—surely among the most benign military occupations of modern times—is undergoing a severe challenge. The immediate cause of the past month's unrest among Arab Palestinians is relatively trivial; the questions raised for Israel's future policy toward its Arab neighbors are fundamental.

Rioting in West Bank towns and East Jerusalem has little to do with the Palestine Liberation Organization or any other radical pressure group. It is rather an expression of localized resentment at an obscure decision of a lone Israeli magistrate concerning the rights of religious Jews to pray on Jerusalem's Temple Mount, which is also a Moslem holy place. This decision was as objectionable to the Israeli Government as to the Arabs, and directly contravened the policy of restraint that has guided the Israelis since 1967. The decision was reversed by the Israeli Supreme Court yesterday.

The real significance of these incidents is to demonstrate the time-bomb nature of perpetuating Israeli military rule over a million alienated Palestinians—a political anomaly that is unsatisfactory over the long run to Arabs and Israelis alike.

Many Israelis now realize their Government's error in prohibiting independent political organization among West Bank residents in the early years of the occupation, before the P.L.O. had become so firmly established in the rest of the Arab world. A credible alternative to the P.L.O. might have arisen; Israeli leaders had hoped that next month's municipal elections on the West Bank might lead to such an alternative Palestinian leadership. Under present circumstances, it is hard to see how anything clear-cut can emerge from these forthcoming elections.

Outside the political sphere, Israel has clearly built up a significant degree of good will among West Bank Palestinians; some are bold enough to admit it openly. Unlike the P.L.O. ideologues, West Bank Arabs have found countless ways in which Israelis and Palestinians can work together on a day-to-day basis for mutual benefit. Once the political status of this population is clarified, it is not unreasonable to hope that these Palestinians can serve as a practical and psychological bridge between Israel and its neighbors, especially Jordan.

But continued military occupation, with no end in sight, is a festering irritant that will increasingly threaten the good will so carefully nurtured. Initially serving to strengthen Israel's security as a buffer zone, the populated occupied territories are starting to sap Israeli strength and weaken its security.

The most constructive initiative which Israeli leaders could undertake would be a calculated effort to lay the groundwork, internally and in diplomatic discussions, for a negotiated end to the decade of military occupation.

...at the U.N.

Only the crazy prism through which the East River's diplomatic corps views the world can justify a Security Council meeting today on the West Bank situation, while the far graver upheaval in Lebanon goes substantially unnoticed. The obvious reason needs no belaboring. A debate on the Israeli military occupation will provide ample opportunity for the anti-Israel rhetoric which has become the United Nations' most abundant staple; discussion of Lebanon would prove embarrassing and divisive to the Arab world.

But regardless of what is actually said at the Council debate, it will not pass as a nonevent. For the first time, representatives of Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization will sit around the same diplomatic table. On previous occasions, when the P.L.O. was invited to participate in Council debates, Israel boycotted the sessions. This time the Israeli Government realized that its interests would be better served by joining in.

No one should expect serious discussion or even contact between Israel and the P.L.O. in the sensitized Security Council forum. But their entrance into the same room at the same time at least overcomes one unnecessary diplomatic hangup.

Fair Revenue Sharing

The joint meeting of the National League of Cities and the United States Conference of Mayors in Washington last week, complete with a Presidential speech lambasting Congress for inaction on general revenue sharing, indicates that the great push for extending that legislation has now begun.

The major question in this election year seems no longer to be whether Congress will extend the program or not, but whether it has the will to improve it and make it conform more closely to the original legislative intent. It is clear that Congress intended four years ago to put "the money where the needs are." It is equally clear, after four years of experience, that the effort was not entirely successful.

The need element in the formula for distributing revenue-sharing funds—the per capita income in the locality—is inadequate. It averages income over an entire jurisdiction in a way that sometimes conceals intense pockets of poverty within that jurisdiction. A much more accurate indicator—the percentage of poverty residents in the locality—was substituted for per capita income in a bill introduced by Representative Dante Fascell of Florida. This measurement coincides with such indicators of real local need as high rates of infant mortality, large quantities of substandard housing and high crime rates.

A substitution of the Fascell formula for that contained in the current legislation would serve to direct more revenue-sharing money both to poor urban areas and to pockets of rural poverty. Thus, old cities with many poor residents such as New York, Baltimore and Milwaukee would gain $350 million annually. By the same token, states such as Georgia and Mississippi where rural poverty is widespread would also receive significant increases.

So far, a subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee has resisted the Fascell formula. Few issues before this session of Congress are more important than improving this massive piece of domestic legislation. And, few improvements rank higher in usefulness than revising the distribution formula to make the program more responsive to the will of Congress and to the needs of the nation's most severely burdened localities.

State-ized Railroad?

The one thing on which the White House and Congress fully agreed in the long wrangle over how to reorganize the sickly Northeast railroads was that the Federal Government wanted no part of nationalization. That was why Conrail was chartered as a for-profit corporation, though when—if ever—it will show a profit is conjectural.

Under those circumstances, it makes no sense for New York State—itsself in a still unwon battle to avert bankruptcy—to contemplate buying up a big chunk of the bankrupt Erie Lackawanna and operating it across four states as a club against Conrail monopoly.

We are in sympathy with the belief of State Transportation Commissioner Schuler that it would be healthy to have another railroad competing with Conrail in the area served by the 1,500 miles of Erie track on which the state has its eye.

But the right way to achieve that competition is the one suggested in the basic plan approved by Congress—acquisition of the Erie facilities by the Chessie System, a deal that fell through because of bidheaded union resistance to changes in featherbedding work rules. A last-ditch attempt to break the labor deadlock is being made in Baltimore at the joint insistence of Secretary of Labor Urey and Secretary of Transportation Coleman. The public interest demands success for this effort.

The same urgency attends Secretary Coleman's pressure on the Southern Railway and its unions to resolve their labor wrangle over labor-protective arrangements on 460 miles of Penn Central track in the Del Marva Peninsula. More than half of that service is slated for abandonment if Conrail takes over. If the model contract Mr. Coleman has proposed to the Southern wins mutual acceptance—as it should—it might set a pattern for the much more complex Chessie deal.

In any event, the Schuler plan for a state-owned rival to Conrail would represent a potentially disastrous experiment. The anticipated initial cost for the trackage of $18 million or less (to be drawn from a $250 million transportation bond issue authorized in 1974) could escalate to hundreds of millions if the state found it then had to acquire tennants and rolling stock, sign labor contracts and actually run trains.

It is true that no such grand design is in the commissioner's mind. On the contrary, the state hopes that one of the four big Western railroads might decide to take the Erie track off its hands as a means of going trans-continental. But in all the exploration done by Federal officials prior to the reorganization bill, the Western roads were unanimous in declaring that they regarded all operation east of Pittsburgh as "a loser."

That means the state would have to depend on Conrail itself as the sole user of its track. Far from gaining leverage under such an arrangement, New York would have nowhere else to look to keep its right of way from rusting out. Commissioner Schuler, whose record of intelligent concern for maximum rail service in this state is outstanding, will have to find other devices for insuring that the citizens of New York are not victimized by an overpowered Conrail brought into being by lavish Federal subsidies.

Farmland and River

Secretary of the Interior Kleppe's intervention with W. R. Grace and Company promises to save a thousand acres of historic farmland in central Virginia from being strip-mined for vermiculite, a substance used for insulation and cat litter. If Mr. Kleppe's appeal is heeded by the company—which owns the land even though it is part of the Green Springs National Historic Landmark—W. R. Grace will donate to the Government its mining rights by way of a scenic easement, getting an appropriate tax deduction in return.

The Secretary was properly unimpressed by company promises to reclaim the property after mining, pointing out that the project would in any case be "incompatible with the cultural and scenic values" of an area noted for farms and plantation houses that are a rich part of Virginia's history. The easement plan would eliminate all industrial uses "in perpetuity."

The Virginia move comes at a moment when the Administration is reportedly about to save the New River in North Carolina from being dammed up by the American Electric Power Company. At the request of the state government, Mr. Kleppe has decided to incorporate this archeologically rich and remarkably beautiful stream into the nation's scenic river system. Anticipating the decision, the company charged the Secretary with trying to make a political play to voters on the eve of the North Carolina primary. If that is really how the Administration reads the public mind on the subject of the environment, so much the better for the country—and so much the worse for those who would make the environmental movement the political goat for energy shortages and economic difficulties.

Despite all opposing forces, Indira Gandhi has managed to (1) keep India together, (2) increase production, (3) curb inflation, (4) avoid mass starvation, (5) withstand pressure on the borders, (6) assist Bangladesh in its desperate liberation war, (7) resist pressure for bases on Indian soil, (8) reduce corruption, black-market transactions and strikes, (9) give the masses a glimpse of hope for a better future and (10) keep India nonaligned.

Trying for nine full years to achieve economic and social development with "democracy" completely intact, she waited in vain for politicians and journalists to understand the severity of the situation. Having the choice between a chaotic "democracy" and development for the masses, she had to act. It is a tragedy that a number of people have had to be detained during the process.

Indira Gandhi's moves appear, however, to be the minimum necessary to avoid either one of two possible alternatives: military or Communist dictatorship. There is every reason to support Indira Gandhi to the benefit of India's masses. She is at present their only hope for two handfuls of rice per day instead of only one—or less.

To the Editor:
Your March 8 editorial "Urging School Aid" was of great to me since it portrayed Ford's proposal to reform and the quality of American education as such negative terms.

I think that it is erroneous to think that there is a connection between "Impact aid" and the Administration proposed legislation. If funds for the former are being "sweetened" to obtain it then the President would be proposing a $350 million cut in assistance.

As for the grants consolidation proposal itself, this represents a step toward better education. State departments of education had a decade of experience with Elementary and Secondary Act (ESEA) and have fully their capacity to assess and needs of special groups of as the act intended.

The growth of the plan administration capacity of the departments of education is direct, intended result of ESEA—the disadvantage of ESEA—the disadvantaged English speaking population in every state's system. That goal of ESEA significant degree, been achieved. The 24 aid programs consolidation are those which will be closely coordinated to a array of services for special needs, and states them toward that end. Yet efforts are now hampered by regulations and procedures that do not recognize the state comprehensive planning Federal Government itself to create.

Apparently it cannot be too often that Federal provides only 7 percent of the elementary and secondary education in the United States and that which control the expenditure other 93 percent, also nearly all the Federal funds at issue is how the Federal government assures that the Federal are used by the states for purposes intended by Congress.

The grants consolidation in no way limits that Federal ability. It gives the states a tude in determining what set best aid the children Congress intended to be served, and it possible a wider range of s the children Congress wish

To Save the Miners

To the Editor:
Coal mining has a historically dismal safety record. It's inherently a dangerous business, but owners appear to have been far more motivated by profit than by the health and safety of the miners. Government hasn't helped much either and has been ineffective in the little it did.

The Scotia Coal Company twin disasters last week are a perfect example. The March 13 Times news story indicated that the miners were provided with breathing units and that six men survived the second blast but died within an hour from the gas. The story noted that the units would provide only an hour's breathing time at the most, and that as the units were used, they heated up so much that they became too hot to wear. What sort of safety device is this?

Reluctant as companies may be to spend money on safety, I suggest that if it hasn't already done so, the Bureau of Mines commission the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) to develop an effective, lightweight survival unit. Probably no other organization in the world is better qualified to do this. Furthermore, it would seem reasonable that some system for keeping men alive longer than just an hour must be found. Could not high capacity, nonportable units be developed which could be placed at intervals throughout the working portions of the mines? Miners could then plug their own portable units into these and survive for the day or two that it usually seems to take to be able to reach mine blast victims.

The experience that NASA has had in keeping men alive in space and in fact, in working with fire departments around the country to develop breathing units, might very well provide a dramatic and important safety device. National policy indicates a greater future dependence on coal. Should we not try to give those who provide it a better chance?

Legal Services: Bargains Without Takers

To the Editor:
Senator Dunne's admirable March 15 Op-Ed article, "Prepaying Lawyers," requires important addenda.

The organized bar (if not the legal profession), spearheaded by the American Bar Association, in recent years, has recognized the inaccessibility to non-business middle income Americans of legal services at affordable cost. That concern and agitation of bar leaders gave rise to the concept of prepaid legal services. Leaders of organized consumer organizations actively joined in the agitation. However, at present, the fact seems to be that (save for members of unions to whom legal services are being offered without direct charge) our non-business middle-income population are not interested. Why do I say that?

In response to what was thought to be a dire need for low-cost legal services, the New York County Lawyers Association, comprised of close to 10,000 lawyers, has established a court-approved prepaid legal services plan which, for a subscription fee of $100 per year, offers a wide range of services by lawyers chosen by the respective subscribers from a volunteer list of participating lawyers.

Some of the services are available without further charge and the rest at $9 per hour, up to approximately 45 hours; and beyond that, at not more than $30 per hour. The plan is offered to residents of New York City—or groups of residents—whose family annual incomes are between $6,000 and $20,000 and whose net assets do not exceed $25,000. Over 200 lawyers have indicated their readiness to serve clients within that category under the terms of the plan which will yield them a maximum of $30 per hour (70 percent of which up to $1,000 will be paid by the plan)—that is at rates believed to be less than one-third to one-half of the fees normally charged to clients.

The plan, at this stage, is experimental. It has received high praise from competent sources. We need a mere 200 subscribers to get started. Thus far we have not been able to procure them. The media have taken very scanty notice of the project—presumably because they assume a lack of public interest.

So, it appears that while the lawyers are concerned and are ready to serve, those for whom we strive seem to feel no need to assure themselves lawyers at low cost, as and when needed, by a subscription fee of $100 per year.

CALLAWAY RESORT RECEIVED U.S. AID

Ski Town Gained $46,305 in Grants Since '74 to Pay Police and a Planner

By JAMES P. STERBA
Special to The New York Times

MOUNT CRESTED BUTTE, Colo., March 20—The ski resort town being developed here by Howard H. Callaway has received $46,305 in Federal grants in the last two years to pay for its two-man police force and to hire a town planner.

The resort became eligible for the grants after its property owners, most of whom worked for or bought land from Mr. Callaway's concern, voted 50 to 12 on Nov. 6, 1973, to incorporate as a town under Colorado law with a home rule charter.

State officials said municipal incorporation, which allows resorts to enact ordinances, levy taxes and apply for government grants, is not unusual for ski areas. State and Federal officials said that although most grant programs were intended to serve impoverished or high crime areas, incorporated resorts could qualify for funds to provide municipal services for skiers and for buyers of property sold by resort developers.

Mr. Callaway's resort came to national attention after he stepped down last Saturday as President Ford's campaign manager amid accusations that he improperly influenced United States Forest Service officials in seeking permits to expand the resort while serving as Secretary of the Army.

Resort Was Bankrupt

The Crested Butte Development Corporation, a Georgia concern, bought the then bankrupt resort in 1970. According to records of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, Mr. Callaway holds a 65.8 percent interest in the corporation, and Ralph O. Walton Jr., his brother-in-law and the corporation's president, holds a 32.9 percent interest.

Three years ago, the state of Colorado granted $125,000 to help upgrade the resort area's sewage treatment facilities to meet standards of the Environmental Protection Agency. The money was paid in 1973 to a special water and sanitation district established as a bond-selling authority in 1962, when the resort was owned by a group of Kansas investors.

The resort is situated on treeless foothills at the base of the skiing mountain. The corporation and its subsidiaries operate the skiing facilities and sell lots and condominiums. There are about 120 property owners now, but the corporation continues to be the major land owner. Since development began, four lodges, five apartment buildings, eight condominium buildings and about 50 private homes have been built. The resort, incorporated as Mount Crested Butte, is two miles northeast of the town of Crested Butte, a separate and much older restored mining village with about 800 permanent residents.

While pushing for incorporation in 1973, the resort developers argued that its needs were different from those of the town of Crested Butte and of the surrounding Gunnison County. They also said it would allow the resort to get revenue-sharing funds from the Federal Government, planning and development grants, rebates on gasoline and road taxes, and a share of liquor licensing fees. They argued that it would not become "a company town."

"Some people have said that Mount Crested Butte would be run by the people who run the ski resort," a special election commission wrote in an open letter published on Oct. 19, 1973, a month before the election. "Nothing could be farther from the truth."

It argued that property owners would rule.

The election commissioners included James R. Larkin, who currently serves as Mayor of Mount Crested Butte. He is also vice president and general manager of the Crested Butte Development Corporation, Mr. Callaway's concern.

Harlem Man With 2 Knives Shot and Killed by Police

A 36-year-old East Harlem man who apparently had been drinking and fighting with his wife in their 10th-floor duplex apartment in the 1199 Plaza Cooperative at 2070 First Avenue was shot and killed by two police officers when he reportedly lunged at them with two carving knives after they tried to placate him.

The officers, William Regalbutto and Gerald Sabin of the 23d Precinct, fired 12 shots at George Gaskin when he refused to obey their orders to drop the knives on the apartment's terrace.

The man's wife, Rose, who had notified the police, told them that he had also fired a shot at her the previous night. Their son, Glen Gillard, and daughter, Ife Gaskin, 14 and 4 years old respectively, were at the apartment at the time of the shootings.

Unsuccessful Cooperative Will Now Offer Rentals

By GLENN FOWLER—The 420 walkup apartments began 15 years ago when a group of Greenwich Village residents led by Jane Jacobs, a cooperative critic, sought to create "human scale" housing as an alternative to the high-rise development.

The cooperative, which had been struggling for years, has now decided to offer the apartments as rentals. The new rental plan, which was approved by the city, will allow the cooperative to charge market rates for the units.

Mets' Frazier Plans Ahead Rangers
As Yanks Conjure the Past Lose to Seaver Will Start in Opener Mantle in Camp Penguins

By JOSEPH DURSO
Special to The New York Times

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 21 — Joe Frazier waited 10 years to manage a big league baseball team and, when he finally did, a historic labor dispute turned his first spring training into a three-week panic.

But the new master of the New York Mets began making fast decisions today as the countdown quickened, and two of his first decisions were these: Jerry Koosman will be the Mets' first pitcher of the exhibition season

Wednesday and Tom Seaver will be their first of the regular season April 9. The two decisions were related, and they demonstrated how the 24 teams and their 600 players would be forced to improvise because of the 17-day delay in training. Instead of having six weeks, they will have three weeks for solving problems that in other years were tackled more leisurely in the sun: who plays where, what rookies make the team, who pitches when.

"I'll only get to pitch three times in exhibition games," Seaver said, checking off a schedule that showed 10 games already canceled. "I'd usually get half a dozen starts and work my way gradually up to nine innings. Now the most I'll go is six or seven by opening day. If we hadn't had those informal workouts at Eckerd College before the camps opened, I'd be way back."

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., March 21—A rookie right-hander, Doug Heinhold, arrived at the Yankees' training camp today to complete the squad, and Mickey Mantle checked in to complete Manager Billy Martin's alumni coaching and instructional staffs.

Mantle joined such former teammates as Yogi Berra, Phil Rizzuto, Whitey Ford and Martin himself. Rizzuto, the bunting instructor, said: "Sure, I'm a little stiff but I'm really enjoying it. I've seen quite a few players I think I can help, even if only by convincing them that most times the only thing they must do is get the bat on the ball."

The Rangers lost their 39th game of the season last night as the Pittsburgh Penguins won, 4-2, at Madison Square Garden. With only seven games left on their national hockey league schedule, the last-place Rangers would have to win every one, while the third-place Atlanta Flames lost all of their remaining six to qualify for the playoffs.

The New Yorkers lost more than a hockey game. Dave Maloney, their injury-prone defenseman, suffered a broken left leg and will be out for the rest of the season. Slamming into a goal post while trying to block a shot, he was carried off the ice in the third period. After X-rays at Lenox Hill Hospital, Maloney's injury was diagnosed as "a fracture of the distal fibula," a team spokesman said.

Kentucky Five Takes
N.I.T. Title by 71-67

By SAM GOLDPAPER

You can find a Reggie Warford on most any college basketball team in the country. He is the high school hotshot who gets lost in a wealth of other high school hotshots, all recruited for the same position. But if he is lucky, there comes a day when a Reggie Warford can have his day. Like yesterday, when Reggie Warford, the lone senior on Kentucky, led the Wildcats to a 71-67 victory over North Carolina at Charlotte in the final of the National Invitation Tournament at Madison Square Garden.

North Carolina State defeated Providence, 74-69, for third-place honors in the preliminary game. Despite the crowd of 12,415, the largest of the tournament, the total attendance of 56,673 for the six sessions was the smallest since 1940 when six teams played over three days. The stage for Warford, who had scored only 3 points in the previous three games, all on free throws, was set when Kentucky got into serious second-half foul trouble. Jack Givens, the team's leading scorer all season long, picked up his fourth foul after 9 seconds of the second half. Mike Phillips, the 6-10 center, was charged with his fourth foul 44 seconds later and James Lee, who had sparked the Wildcats to victory in the first two tourney games, was slapped with his fourth violation with 10:37 left.

Warford, a 6-1 backcourt man with a 6.8-point season average, picked up the scoring lag with 10 of his 14 points. His driving left-side layup put Kentucky ahead, 60-59, and his 15-foot right side jump shot gave the Wildcats a 64-63 advantage, a lead it never relinquished. On that play Maxwell also fouled Phillips and he made both free throws. Melvin Watkins cut the Kentucky lead to 66-65, with 39 seconds left, but two free throws by Larry Johnson restored the 3-point edge 17 seconds later. When Maxwell's basket again cut the Wildcats edge to a point with 9 seconds remaining, Phillips's 3-point play 2 seconds later ended all hope for the Forty-Niners. "It's my win," said Warford after the game, "and no one Continued on Page 35, Column 1

Man Beaten by 'Final Four'
Picks Indiana to Stay No. 1

By TONY KORNHEISER

The teams have dwindled down to a precious few—Indiana, Rutgers, Michigan and (of course) the University of California, Los Angeles, the defending National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball champion — the "final four" in your N.C.A.A. program. Fred Schaus is picking Indiana. And he should know. Schaus is the coach of the Purdue team that played — and lost to — each of the teams in the final four. He lost twice to Indiana and Michigan in big 10 conference play, and once to U.C.L.A. and Rutgers. "I'm going with No. 1," Schaus said yesterday. "Indiana has so many ways to beat you: Defense, boards, streak shooting. They have had so many close games, but they have always found a way to win."

The four survivors from the regional playoffs are bound for Philadelphia and the national semifinals. On Saturday, Indiana plays U.C.L.A. and Michigan meets Rutgers. It is the first N.C.A.A. championship to be played at the Spectrum, and it is a tournament overloaded with "firsts."

1973 that Indiana is in the final four. Three years ago, Indiana lost in U.C.L.A. and the Bruins, led by Bill Walton and Keith Wilkes, won the championship. And it is the first time since last year that U.C.L.A. made the final four. U.C.L.A. under Coach John Wooden, made the final four in all 11 of the last 12 years, and won the championship 10 times. The Bruins' only loss was in the 1974 semifinal against North Carolina State, with David Thompson and Tom Burleson. The difference this year is that Wooden has retired, and Gene Bartow, U.C.L.A.'s coach, the real rookie on a mostly-veteran tournament team. Bartow's Bruins, with their record of 26 victories and 4 losses, will play Indiana in the power matchup semi-

As this is written a rodeo is winding up in Calgary, Alberta, not the famous Calgary Stampede, which is a full-dress affair that comes off in July, but an indoor show. When competition started last week, the bulldogger who won top money in the opening cowboy rodeo, the cowboy who was second and the one who finished third all worked off the same horse, a swift but temperamental animal named Little Eight. In steer wrestling, the horse is all important, and several cowboys may use the same mount, each paying the owner 25 percent of his prize money.

For three comparative strangers, Little Eight performed flawlessly. When Bob Marshall, his owner, got aboard, Little Eight left the chute too soon and Marshall didn't score. Considering that Marshall thinks so highly of Little Eight that he paid a bigger price for him than any dogging horse had ever brought, this was downright bad manners, but Little Eight always did have a will of his own.

In 1973 when a Japanese-American syndicate bid a record $600,000 for a yearling son of Bold Ruler who was later named Wajima, the Keeneland sales pavilion reacted the way Wall Street would if the Dow Jones average closed at 1,100. Little Eight's pedigree goes back to a stallion named Three Bars, the Bold Ruler of quarter horses, but he was something like 12 years old when Marshall bought him for $15,000, money he had earned a dollar at a time threshing about in dust and mud in hand-to-horn combat with ill-tempered steers. That was a bit less than a year ago, when both horse and man had been around for a spell. Little Eight was foaled in Michigan and he was born spoiled. He was bred by Jack Dare, who raised reining horses for shows. With almost invisible guidance from his rider, a reining horse is supposed to turn, back up and stop on a dime or preferably 9 cents, but Little Eight had other ideas. Disgusted, Dare sold him to Wimpy Sleeter, a New Jersey blacksmith.

ranch is a favorite stop for many rodeo hands. "I'll buy him if I can," Shendall said, sight unseen. Little Eight was in Fort Worth, where he had been hauled by two friends of Faircloth, who was laid up. After much haggling on the telephone, Barney told Dean, "Go get him in Fort Worth and have $3,000 with you." That was in 1970 when Dean, a spare-time bulldogger, was making a good many rodeos. Now Bob Marshall gets into the act. He is a big, powerful man of 36 who excelled in football and baseball in junior college in California and then went out to scuffle for a living. At 24 he was on a construction job, "partying more than I should and getting no exercise." A friend named Mike Irving suggested that they try bulldogging, though neither was at home on a horse. "I was pitiful," Bob says, "but other sports had been easy for me and I got so determined to learn, it was like a mania."

Bob Marshall Goes to School The Ferguson family lived near San Martin, Calif., Marshall's hometown. Ira Ferguson had been a bulldogger and calf roper and was coaching his sons, Tom and Larry, who were polished hands as teen-agers. Ira took an interest in their big, bumbling neighbor. "The only advantage I had," Marshall says, "was I was so green I didn't have many bad habits to overcome." Tom and Larry are accomplished wranglers. In 1974 Tom won the calf-roping championship, was second in steer wrestling and won the all-round title with record earnings of $66,929. The brothers' success testifies to the quality of their coaching, yet not even Ira Ferguson could have guessed that his third pupil would be the first of the trio to take a championship. Bob Marshall "won the world" in bulldogging in 1973.

Meanwhile, he had been pestering Dean Shendall to sell him Little Eight. In bulldogging, the steer gets a head start, pursued by the dogger at his left and the hazer, another cowboy, riding at his right to keep him straight. Coming abreast, the dogger reaches down to grasp the right horn, then drops from his horse and flops his quarry on its side. As he leaves the saddle, his mount should veer left to whip the rider's legs out at a 45-degree angle to the steer's path. If the horse doesn't "widen" properly, the cowboy's legs trail behind and the steer drags him. Marshall yearned for Little Eight's speed and talent, and late last March, Shendall accepted his $15,000, plus $2,000 for a hazing horse named Glory. Five days later a steer cut under Glory and shattered the horse's near hind leg and Glory had to be destroyed. During the rest of last year, Marshall won $18,000 off Little Eight and collected $6,000 from other cowboys who used him. Starting this year, they won at Denver, won at Fort Worth, placed at San Antonio. Up to last week Bob had won $15,000 and Little Eight had brought him another $8,000 in mount money. Marshall is out in front going for another world championship. The only wrangler crowding him is Tom Ferguson.

Relentless Wind Tries Mettle of Earth Day Marathon Runners

By PAUL L. MONTGOMERY

WESTBURY, L.I., March 21—Twenty-five-mile-a-hour gusts of wind and a 26-mile, 385-yard course tested the mettle of long-distance running enthusiasts today in Nassau County's 18th annual Earth Day marathon.

Though the calendar said it was the first day of spring, the weather was harsh and unrelenting. The blustery wind blew runners out of stride, and for late finishers there was a torrential downpour to greet them at the tape.

Justin Gubbins, a Long Islander running for the New York Athletic Club, finished in 2 hours 24 minutes 21.6 seconds, a fine time considering the weather conditions. It was a record for the course, bettering the 2:27:14 recorded by the Rev. Sean Healy last year.

Gubbins, who missed the qualifying time for the Olympic tryouts by less than a minute and a half, crossed the line smiling and waving to friends. On the faces of some who came after, however, there were no smiles; they trotted in limping, barely able to put one foot ahead of the other, with a lot of the whites showing in their glazed eyes.

When Chris Maher stumbled across in 2:50, good for 35th place, he was vomiting blood. Two teen-age boys and a number of men collapsed on the track, dehydrated and shivering. In the marathoner's code, one of the first injunctions is not to give up.

"I felt like giving up a few times," said Lauri Pedrinan of the West Side Y.M.C.A., the first woman finisher in 3:13:09. "But it's always in the back of your mind that you won't."

The course began at Roosevelt Raceway, made four 5.8-mile loops around Eisenhower Park, then finished back at the track on the homestretch. The Olympic qualifying time was 2:23. For next month's Boston Marathon, the qualifying times are 3:00 for men under 40 and 3:30 for men over 40 and all women.

The race was sponsored by the Nassau County Recreation Department, the Long Island Athletic Club and the local branch of the Road Runners Club of America. There were more than 600 entries.

One of the happiest finishers was Marty Brown of C.W. Post College, whose 2:55:53 put him fifth in the field. "I can't believe it," the 19-year-old kept saying. "It was my first marathon."

Brown's longest previous race was 15 miles. "They told me at 20 miles you hit something like a wall," the youth observed. "Mine came around 16 miles, then I got a second wind or something. It's a great feeling at the finish."

Dan Larsen of the Capital Track Club in Albany was staggering as he reached the finish. After recording a 2:41:15 time, he collapsed in the arms of his girlfriend, Carolyn Knobel. She walked him around the Roosevelt infield for a while, and when he had peeled off his blood-stained socks he looked himself again.

"I was hurting pretty bad between the blisters and the wind," said the 24-year-old medical student. "But don't drop out of a marathon. You just don't."

Miss Knobel said that she had mixed emotions seeing her friend run. "I don't like to see him in pain; I know it makes him feel good to do it," she said.

Gubbins attracted a crowd of running devotees, the race as he talked about training, diet and out of the road-running game. The 24-year-old G. graduate, a substitute teacher at Bellport (L.I.) runs about 70 miles a week—half the distance of marathoners in heavy training.

Gubbins said that with heavy training and a vicious diet he had experienced dehydration and for sweets, neither of which is desirable for a starved runner.

"Now I've cut out white sugars and I'm on liver and lean meat and drinking lots of milk. Running is funny. Sometimes you go out super the next time you come out. I don't know what.

The runner hopes to make the Olympic team in Boston, but has other plans for the incoming year to Albany next week for a 30-kilometer run. "If I recover from this in time."

The leading finishers: 1—Justin Gubbins, A.C., 2:24:21.6; 2—Michael Butnyez, unattached, 2:35:50; 3—Samuel Mawaz, West Point, 2:35:50; 4—Dan unattached, 2:35:53; 5—Marty Brown, C.W. Post, 2:55:53; 6—Steve Ferrigno, unattached, 2:56:23; 7—Strother, Long Island A.C., 2:56:44; 8—Steph Milrose, A.C., 2:56:26; 9—Duncan Brown, 2:57:50; 10—Alan Kirk, Long Island A.C., 2:58:00.

Justin Gubbins, left, crossing the finish line to win the Nassau County Earth Day marathon yesterday in 2 hours 24 minutes 21.6 seconds. Lauri Pedrinan, right, was first woman to finish, with a time of 3 hours 13 minutes.

Westbrook Victor In Final of Saber

After a chorus of coaches prompted the baby of this competition with instructions, Westbrook grinned and saluted the crowd of 600 persons with his shining saber yesterday on finishing first in the Martini & Rossi international Fencing challenge.

Twelve nations participated in the 16th annual competition at the New York Athletic Club.

Westbrook, a fresh-faced N.Y.U. graduate student and two-time national champion, won four of five bouts in the final round of the flamboyant saber competition. He won his roughest bouts—against the bearish Mario Aldo Montano of Italy and Jatac Bierkowski of Poland—with scoring defensive work—"distance, distance," Peter shouted his coaches, and the young fencer listened. "I waited and waited and waited for them to make a mistake," said Westbrook, "and then I moved in."

Turning aside attacks as he backed toward the edge of the strip, his quick hands thrust his weapon forward for the touch just in time.

Montano, last year's winner, and Michele Massei, who finished second to Westbrook, offered contrasting Italian styles. Massei was the intellectual, fencing with calm efficiency. Montano, something of an actor and clown, removed his mask frequently to raise his eyebrows at the jury of referees and to joke with his opponents, sometimes patting them on the cheek in consolation or a touch.

When no outright winner emerged from the final epee round, a four-man barrage or fencoeff was held. Jaroslav Jurka, a 27-year-old Czechoslovak, woo the extra round.

The storming, intimidating style of Kevan Palm gave the 12-time Swedish national champion a sweep of the women's foil finals with five victories. Her keener rival yesterday was Claude Hulín of Belgium who scored on her three times in the last round. The Belgian seemed to tie a bit toward the end of her bout—the 24th of the day, but the muscular Miss Palm was in full command.

Miss Palm, who is 30 years old, has been fencing for 16 years and made it to the finals of the 1968 and 1972 Olympics. "I have been fencing at the same level for many years," she said. "I have no real good talents in any other sports, but I run and swim if it will help my fencing. I couldn't live without it. It's a disease."

The women's foil competition was strong yesterday, but the Olympics will be much more difficult. "The Russians, the Rumanians and the Hungarians are not here, and they are the best in the world," said Miss Palm.

Tennis Students Yell 'Out' Loudly Frazier Puts Met Rotation In Operation

By PARTON KEESSE
Special to The New York Times

BALDWIN, L.I., March 21—Like Nassau County might have had a heart attack if he had been here to see it—a school for tennis officials. There they were at Baldwin Tennis Club this weekend, about 60 men and women learning to shout "out!" with all the gusto of an angry World Series umpire. Arguing with that kind of authority and you'd wish you were out playing in the traffic on Sunrise Highway.

"That's the kind of respect being sought, however, at this first-of-its-kind training ground, one of several being run throughout the country by World Team Tennis. About to enter its third year of operations, W.T.T. wants to throw the mantle off the old sit-down-and-dream style of officiating and exchange it for a more athletic and wide-awake, mobile kind.

"We never got the quality of officials we'd hoped for the first two years," said Larry King, president of the league. "We've had to rely on what was available in the tennis establishment, and it's proved inadequate for our modern team-tennis format."

"So this year we are upping our budget on officiating from $30,000 to $45,000 and going after umpires and referees from other team sports. The rules of tennis can be taught, we feel, but not the experience of controlling players, a match or an excited crowd."

Basketball, football, volleyball, baseball and soccer officials were what W.T.T. sought, and that is what it got—by the hundreds. Lured by the promise of $25 minimum payments for a match (at the 1975 United States Open officials were paid $3.75 for a 12-hour shift) nearly 200 applicants had to be turned away from training sessions in Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Boston, San Francisco and New York, according to King.

"Tennis experience is not important or even desired," King added. "Our ideas of officiating a match are so different, we feel it's easier not to have to unlearn what people have been doing under traditional methods."

The most revolutionary differences including getting rid of all chairs so that line judges remain on their feet throughout a match as they do in most major team sports. Even the referee—no longer called an umpire, stands usually on a raised platform at one end of the net to keep score.

Only four persons call the lines, each one handling a service line as well as a baseline or sideline. This involves flowing unobtrusively with the play so that they don't bother the players, yet eliminating the scene of a typical match surrounded by nine or 10 bored-looking persons, all sitting down.

There is no net judge, and any judge or referee who hears a net call it. All officials are in uniform, wearing speakers and must pass a tough rule-book quiz, a color test and an eye exam. Above all, W.T.T. officials must possess the kind of poise and attitude that show they know what they're doing and cannot be intimidated or made to change their mind.

Only 12-to-15 applicants in each of the 10 W.T.T. cities will be hired, King said, which means that tennis officiating suddenly has become a competitive field. The new plan also may eliminate the practice of many tournament operators who call a friend the night before to see if he could referee a tennis match.

"W.T.T. is big time now," asserted Dick Robinson, who is in charge of training officials. "We've got to match our star players with officials of equal caliber."

Anyone for a used umpire's chair?

Tire Change H Pearson Wins

HAMPTON, Ga., March 21 (AP)—David Pearson took a full set of tires with 50 miles to go and sped away from Benny Parsons for the victory today in the Atlanta 500 stock car race.

Parsons, who had a decisive lead with 100 miles left, took on only two tires when the leaders all pitted for the final time.

Pearson, who earned about $16,000 from the $151,900 purse, quickly made up the difference thanks to the improved traction and had a 1.8-second margin at the checkered flag.

Parsons, leading the National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing Grand National points standing, was one of the few leaders not to encounter problems during the four-hour race.

Pearson lost a lap with the troubles early in the race. Third-place Cale Yarborough, with his Chevrolet clearly the fastest car on the track, lost four laps mid-way through the race to change a broken distributor rotor. He managed to make up all but one circuit around a 1.522-mile Atlanta International Raceway.

Lennis Pond was fourth, another lap back, with his Chevrolet smashed in the rear.

Fifth-place Darrell Waltrip nearly lost the hood on his Chevrolet early on, when the support brackets gave out.

The pole-position starter, Dave Malcolm, lost an engine in his Dodge early in the race. Simultaneously, before Richard Petty and Buddy Baker.

Pearson averaged 128.904 miles an hour.

Motorcycle Crash Injures Phil Read

MODENA, Italy, March 21 (Reuters)—Phil Read, a world motorcycle champion seven times, was injured today when he crashed on the opening lap of the 500-cm event in the City of Imola Grand Prix.

The English racer was taken to Modena Hospital, where doctors said he had injuries to the chest and left shoulder and mild concussion. They said he should be fit in about 10 days, barring complications.

The race was won by another multiple world-title winner, Giacomo Agostini of Italy.

Avatar Captures Rich Coast Race

ARCADIA, Calif., March 21 (AP)—Avatar, the 1975 Belmont Stakes winner, but a loser at Santa Anita this winter, switched from the dirt course to the turf for the first time today and scored a close victory in the $109,300 San Luis Rey Stakes.

Laffite Pincay rode Avatar to a head trumph over Ga Hai, but Ga Hai was disqualified for interference and shunted back to fourth. The second-place finisher was ruled to be Top Crowd. Top Command was given third place.

A crowd of 51,688 saw the race, which set the stage for the $125,000 San Juan Capistrano Handicap April 4.

There was no question about Avatar's victory but the stewards held that Ga Hai, ridden by Don Pierce, caused interference in the stretch run, first to Top Crowd, then Frank Olivares aboard, and Top Command, ridden by Bill Shoemaker.

Avatar, a son of Graustark, earned $64,300. He ran the 1 1/2 miles in 2:34 4-5 and returned $8.80 for $2.

Race-Fix Driver Gets Six Months

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., March 21—A harness-racing driver, Adriano Bowling of Morrisville, Pa., has been sentenced to six months in prison for fixing a race at Pocono Downs last Aug. 5. The 36-year-old Bowling, who pleaded guilty to two counts of rigging a Big Triple race, was liable on each charge, to a $10,000 fine and/or five years imprisonment.

Another driver, Edward Williams, 29, of Buffalo, was found guilty on one count of race-fixing of the same race. He is awaiting a hearing April 22 on an appeal for a new trial.

Federal and state authorities are investigating a possible link between this case and similar cases at both thoughtbred and harness tracks in the last two years in the Northeast.

Mobil to Push a New Product

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

At the end of this week the Mobil Oil Corporation will break its first product advertising since June 1973, when Mr. Dirt bit the dust.

The new campaign will be for a product, unlike many from oil companies, that seems genuinely different from what competitors are offering. It's summed up in an ad headline: "Introducing an oil that saves you gas."

The product is Mobil 1, a synthesized engine lubricant, which Mobil says can give the average car up to 10 extra miles to a tankful of gasoline. It is also said to perform at high and low temperatures.

Mobil, which has been putting millions of dollars into corporate advertising, will say only that the budget for the Mobil 1 introduction is a multimillion-dollar one.

Doyle Dane Bernbach is the agency. The newspaper ads it has prepared will begin to run Friday in 80 markets. On Saturday three 30-second TV spots will begin to run on network television, and spot television in 46 markets will begin early in April.

Mobil 1 is expensive, with a suggested retail price of $3.95 a quart. It went into test market at the end of last August in Albany, Syracuse, Boston, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Providence, Portland, Ore., and parts of Washington State.

Mademoiselle Readers Mademoiselle, along with such magazines as Time and Esquire, took a beating in the audience department when the last figures were published by W. R. Simmons Research.

The previous Simmons audience data had put Mademoiselle at 3,493,000 when suddenly the 1975 figures showed it at 2,453,000. That made the advertising cost per thousand soar from $1.42, the lowest in the field, to $2.20.

Now that the salesmen can't sing about efficiency, Frederick W. Jackson 3d, the publisher, will be orchestrate a canny on quality, pointing out in an ad that "Mademoiselle readers are in a class by themselves: the upper one."

He has been publisher for three years, having come aboard at that rank after service with The New Yorker, Good Housekeeping and

The new product to be marketed by Mobil.

Young & Rubicam. Up to four months ago Mademoiselle's promotional needs were handled in-house, with space being bought by Altman, Stoller, Weiss.

Mr. Jackson was not satisfied with that situation, so after a competition he named Sacks & Rosen as the agency. Its job will be to position the Mademoiselle reader, which Mr. Jackson believes lacks the clear image of readers of Glamour (a sister publication in Condé Nast) or Cosmopolitan.

As Mr. Jackson sees her (with the help of research) the Mademoiselle reader is a trend-setter accustomed to doing things on her own. She lives in an urban area, makes a good salary and "doesn't want to be told what to do. She wants to know what the options are in fashion, make-up and interior design."

So the campaign, which will run in Media Decisions, Women's Wear Daily, Advertising Age and (in color) in The New York Times Magazine, will feature such headlines as these:

"I'm 26, single and earn $19,000 a year. Call me Mademoiselle."

"I could care less whether straight hair is in or out. I prefer to make waves. Call me Mademoiselle."

All the headlines will have that last sentence and this tagline: "Mademoiselle. The magazine more select women select."

The magazine dropped to 1,213 ad pages last year from 1,320 in 1974, and the Publishers Information Bureau ad revenue figures were from $9.5 million to $8.9 million.

The publisher of Mademoiselle is pleased to report that pages for the first half of the Bicentennial year are already up 6 percent from the first half of 1975.

Advertising a Movie

Tom Laughlin, who made a financial success out of the movie "Billy Jack" through advertising, is going to give it another try with a cheapie called "Train Ride to Hollywood."

Introduced in Detroit in October, the Taylor-Laughlin Distribution release fell on its face despite heavy publicity and promotion backing, according to Mr. Laughlin's publicity people. However, it was noticed that the movie, described as a "wacky, far-out musical," did get "good word-of-mouth publicity."

So some equally far-out and wacky advertising was created in-house and the picture was released in three test markets, each of which received different levels of advertising. Media placement was handled by the Jack Wodell Agency.

In Austin, Tex., the picture was promoted only with newspaper ads. The same amount of newspaper advertising was used in Providence, R.I., along with some modest television. The heavy promotion guns were unlimbered in Omaha newspapers, radio and television.

And — good news, advertising fans — Omaha did the best. Even after the advertising pressure was lessened, it continued to do well because of the aforementioned word-of-mouth.

Now, according to the public relations people, Taylor-Laughlin, the movie is ready to go into national distribution.

Shima Leaves Agency

John F. Shima has resigned as president and chief executive officer of Shima/Passberger "to take a vacation." The company changed its name in December from PKL Inc.

Herbert Passberger, who had been vice president and creative director, has been elected president. Anthony Romano has been named executive vice president and chief operating officer.

Personal Finance: Capital Gains Tax

By LEONARD SLOANE

Special rules govern the taxation of capital gains, often enabling individuals to pay lower taxes than on ordinary income. It is important, therefore, to understand the definition, timing, math and limitations of this tax.

The tax is essentially based on gains and losses from sales and exchanges of certain kinds of property called capital assets. Generally all properties owned are capital assets and are subject to capital gains treatment if they are not used in a trade, business or other income-producing activity.

A gain realized from the sale of capital assets is almost always taxed to the seller, whether the item is held for investment (such as securities and real estate) or for personal use (such as homes, automobiles and jewelry). But the losses that offset these gains are deductible only on investment properties.

Thus a loss on a pleasure automobile, jewelry or work of art cannot be deducted on a Federal income tax return. If these items, however, were acquired for the purpose of resale and used only incidentally for pleasure purposes—a deduction can be taken.

According to present law, a gain in loss is considered short-term if the asset was held for six months or less and long-term if held for more than six months. President Ford has proposed, however, legislation extending the short-term period to one year.

Capital gains are now given favorable tax treatment only when the property sold or exchanged has been held for longer than six months. Short-term gains are taxed regular rates.

In counting the period that the asset was held to determine if the gain or loss is long-term or short-term, the beginning date is normally the day after the property was acquired. The last date of the holding period is the day on which it was sold.

For instance, a stock or bond purchased on March 4 and sold on Sept. 5 would qualify for long-term capital gains treatment. When real estate is involved, the date of acquisition is considered to be the earlier of the date you receive title or the date you receive the property and assume the burdens of ownership.

In computing the tax, the first step is to classify all capital assets that were sold as either short-term or long-term and to find the gain or loss on each sale. Then the short-term gains and losses are merged to provide a net short-term gain or loss. A like procedure is followed for long-term gains and losses to arrive at a net long-term gain or loss.

If there is a net long-term capital gain that exceeds a net short-term capital gain, the tax on only 50 percent of the difference results in half the normal rate.

If short-term capital gain prevails after the calculations are completed, it is taxed at the regular rate. If there is a net capital loss, it can be applied against ordinary income, with a maximum deduction of $1,000.

Here too there is a differential between the short-term and long-term basis. Although excess short-term capital losses offset ordinary income on a dollar-for-dollar basis, it takes 32 of a long-term capital loss to offset $1 of ordinary income.

A person can carry over any unused net capital loss for many years until it is exhausted. But such a loss is treated as long-term or short-term each year depending on whether it was originally short or long term. For example, a net long-term capital loss carryover will initially reduce long-term capital gains and finally up to $1,000 of ordinary income.

As an alternative to this method of computation, the tax can be figured another way that effectively limits it on any excess of net long-term capital gain over a short-term capital loss. For taxpayers above the 50 percent bracket, both computations should be made to find the lowest possible tax.

AMAZ

AMAZ: Analysis of Media According to Zip. A remarkable innovation from TIME Magazine. A computerized system that analyzes the distribution of a media schedule, that helps you evaluate your media in terms of TV, magazine and census data.

AMAZ is based on two vital facts: (1) that heavy magazine readers are typically light TV-watchers; (2) that heavy magazine readers are principally in the most affluent Zip Code Areas. If your advertising budget is concentrated in television, you might be missing a lot of your best prospects—the households that do a lot of magazine reading but don't watch television very often.

There is a happy medium between television and print. That's what AMAZ helps you achieve. AMAZ gives you a rational basis for specific additions and deletions in your media schedule. AMAZ gives you an impregnable logic for dropping certain TV allocations and adding certain print schedules to your plan, so you reach your best prospects without spending any more money.

Among print media, TIME has no peer in tailoring your advertising to specific markets, regional or demographic. What can an analysis of media according to Zip do for your product? It can show you what you're getting (or missing) with your current advertising program. We've done it for some of the country's biggest advertisers. AMAZ. # New Fusion Reactor Likely to Break Even in Fuel Use

By WALTER SULLIVAN

Unexpectedly rapid progress in recent months to a critical area of fusion research, known as neutral beam injection, has virtually guaranteed "break-even" power production for a new fusion reactor to be built at Princeton.

This is the view of specialists at the Princeton Plasma Physics Laboratory, site of the $228-million project. When completed in 1981, it will be the most ambitious effort in the American program to harness the hydrogen atom that began at Princeton just a quarter of a century ago.

Fusion—the release of nuclear energy by fusing small atoms such as hydrogen into larger ones such as helium—could provide virtually unlimited energy.

The original line of attack was magnetically "bottling" a hot gas, or plasma, composed of the heavier forms of hydrogen, squeezing and heating the mixture until fusion occurred. A more recent approach has been to use converging laser beams to crush pellets of fusion fuel to the required density and temperature. The major American effort, however, is in magnetic confinement of plasma with special emphasis on the Soviet-originated tokamak design.

"Bottled" Plasma

Neutral beam injection makes it possible to fire a high-energy beam into the magnetically "bottled" plasma to heat and enrich the plasma fuel. Recent advances in this area have made it seem that the new Princeton reactor will be able to "break even"—that is, release as much fusion energy as is needed to operate it.

Nevertheless, Dr. Melvin E. Gottlieb, director of the laboratory, which is operated by Princeton University for the Energy Research and Development Administration, cautioned in an interview this week that a key question remains: "How big?"

It already appears that a working fusion reactor of the tokamak variety will have to be large and costly. Despite the optimism and enthusiasm evident in the laboratories where fusion research is underway, Dr. Gottlieb noted continuing uncertainty as to whether or not fusion would become an economic energy source.

Last week he, his colleagues and others in fusion research told of recent advances here and abroad. They reported, for example, that the Russians, as the next step in their ambitious program, were planning a hybrid fusion-fission reactor, the Tokamak-20.

Fission is the atom-splitting process that powers the nuclear plants of today. The atoms split are typically those of uranium 235, although plutonium 239 can also be used.

Hybrid Reactors

In the hybrid reactor, the intense flow of high-energy neutrons produced by fusion would convert uranium 238 (which is unsuitable as reactor fuel) into plutonium.

A similar "breeding" of new fuel is caused by neutrons from fission reactions to breed reactors, a few of which are now operating. The Tokamak-20, to be completed by 1982, would produce 3,300 pounds of plutonium yearly.

In Japan, the JT-60 will be even larger than the projected TFTR, or Tokamak Fusion Test Reactor, at Princeton. The purpose is to test the behavior of hydrogen plasma in so large a machine. No fusion reactions are expected.

Other big machines, planned or built, include the Joint European Tokamak, or JET, as well as devices in Italy, Germany and elsewhere.

The TFTR will fuse the two at the University of California in Berkeley.

The 2X-D-B is a mirror machine—a simpler design than the Tokamak—which has recently re-emerged as a cooler, thanks to the development of neutral beams. Livermore now hopes that $100 million will be provided in the Federal budget for the fiscal year 1978 to build the MX—a large machine of this type.

Fusion Reactors

In the present concept of a fusion reactor, neutrons ejected by the fusion of deuterium and tritium would be trapped in a surrounding blanket of lithium 6, heating the latter and, at the same time, producing new tritium. The latter is relatively short-lived and so, in contrast to deuterium, is not found in naturally occurring hydrogen. The heat would produce steam to drive a power plant.

A limiting factor, if this approach to fusion becomes practical, may be the cost of lithium. The latter is abundant, but the extent of easily accessible sources, according to an assessment in the March 12 issue of the magazine Science, is uncertain.

As pointed out this week by Dr. Edward A. Frieman, associate director of the Princeton laboratory, some fusion processes do not require tritium, such as the combining of helium 3 with deuterium. This, he said, is the "dream" process that produces charged particles.

The latter could be used for direct generation of electricity, free from the inefficiency and heat-disposal problems of steam. The requirements to achieve such fusion are much more severe than for the deuterium-tritium process but, the latter, is achieved, Dr. Frieman said, the other may ultimately prove feasible.

A few days ago, Ebasco Services Inc. was chosen as industrial subcontractor for the TFTR project with the Grumman Aerospace Corporation as subcontractor to Ebasco. There had been six bids for the contract.

The device will be roughly twice the size of the Princeton Large Torus, which began operation in December. The latter represents an intermediate step in exploring what happens as the scale of Tokamak systems is greatly enlarged.

The next step after TFTR would be the EPR, or Engineer-Driven Power Reactor, to be built in the mid-1980's for $1 billion, which will test such elements as the lithium blanket and heat exchanger systems. The first demonstration power plant would come near the end of the century.

Explaining the relationship of the Princeton effort to work at other American centers, Dr. Frieman said: "We are tramp-building down the main road." heavy forms of hydrogen: deuterium and tritium. The deuterium nucleus contains a neutron in addition to the single proton characteristic of all hydrogen atoms. Tritium contains yet another neutron. When they fuse, a left-over neutron is released at high energy.

In the reactor, tritium plasma will be confined inside a magnetic "bottle" and a beam of deuterium will be fired into the bottle, beating the deuterium-tritium mixture to the fusion point. The deuterium beam can pass through the magnetic wall because it is electrically neutral.

Yet the beam cannot be accelerated when neutral. Hence the deuterium is first stripped of electrons, leaving its atoms positively charged. They are accelerated, then fired through an electron-rich gas to become neutral again, and aimed into the magnetic "bottle."

It has been the rapid development of this technique, notably at Fontenay-aux-Roses in France, the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee and the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory in California, that has led to new optimism in this area of fusion research.

This week, Dr. Frederick Coensgen, in charge of the project at Livermore, said: "It's a hundredth of a second, long as firing a billion billion deuterium nuclei into the 2X-D-B machine there. Beams seven times that strong will be needed and are under development."

The TFTR will fuse the two at at the University of California in Berkeley.

He cited the $28 million Doubles-III machine being built by the General Atomic Company in San Diego, which will test a novel plasma chamber, wisp-waisted in cross section. Operation by early 1978 is projected. The Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory in New Mexico is working on the Scyllac machine in which plasma is subjected to a sudden magnetic pinch.

At Princeton, the PDX or Poloidal Divertor Experiment, to be built in the next year or two at a cost of $17 million to test a magnetic method for removing plasma particles that otherwise would hit the chamber walls. At present such collisions knock carbon and oxygen atoms out of the walls to pollute the plasma.

Lead Time in Work

The PDX plasma cloud will be doughnut-shaped, as in all Tokamak devices, but relatively thick—some three feet in diameter. It is typical of the long lead times in such work that PDX results will not come in time for use in the TFTR, although they will be applicable to later machines.

The TFTR will operate in pulses one to five seconds long. Fusion power plants with such pulses hundreds of seconds long are hoped for, with a possibility, as we see it, of operation.

The 300D is a newer engineering tour de force. It is the world's first 5-cylinder Diesel passenger car. It establishes a whole new category of Diesel—a whole new category of

Harris to Focus Efforts

WASHINGTON, March 21 (AP)—Former Senator Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma said today that he would focus his efforts on campaigning in Pennsylvania in an attempt to make a good showing in the state's Democratic Presidential primary April 27. "We are hoarding our money, our resources and our workers and we are going full time into Pennsylvania," Mr. Harris said in the CBS program "Face the Nation."

Finally, at least three domestic manufacturers and another two imports have shown serious interest in introducing Diesel passenger cars to the United States. You might see the results of their interest as early as 1978.

It's about time. The Diesel passenger car is a uniquely practical idea whose time came long ago for the rest of the world.

First, a few of our credentials:

- Mercedes-Benz introduced the first production Diesel passenger car the world has ever seen. The date: 1936. Only Mercedes-Benz can discuss passenger car Diesels with the authority of forty consecutive years of experience.
- Mercedes-Benz has produced over 1,500,000 Diesels, over 500,000 of them since 1971 alone.
- Mercedes-Benz Diesels are now operated in one hundred seventy-seven countries around the world.
- Mercedes-Benz has sold Diesel cars to more than 80,000 Americans over the past decade alone. And Mercedes-Benz has a network of over 400 Dealerships all across the United States where highly skilled and fully experienced technicians know precisely how to service Diesels for maximum performance and economy.

- Mercedes-Benz has pioneered virtually all of the major refinements in passenger car Diesels. Among them, multistage fuel injection, precombustion chambers and, most recently, the world's first 5-cylinder Diesel engine.
- Mercedes-Benz has improved the performance of its Diesel cars to levels comparable with gasoline-powered cars. Over the past twenty-five years, we have increased maximum vehicle speed by over 40 percent, maximum horsepower by 100 percent.

hundreds of others who haven't a clue about the blessings of this extraordinary automobile. For example:

- The Mercedes-Benz Diesel never requires a conventional tune-up. Unlike gasoline engines, Diesel engines have no fussy ignition systems, no points, condensers, spark plugs, carburetors or distributors. Furthermore, parts that aren't there can't break or need service or replacement.

- The Mercedes-Benz Diesel doesn't charge an ecological penalty. Virtually all gasoline engines are required to mount a costly emissions-cleaning device that reduces performance as well as pollutants. Not so a Diesel. A Diesel is an exceptionally clean-burning engine because it consumes its fuel much more efficiently than a gas engine can.
- The Mercedes-Benz Diesel has an enviable reputation for engineering, craftsmanship and durability. It embodies the almost legendary Mercedes-Benz safety achievements. Something else: Based on the average official use car prices over the past five years, Mercedes-Benz holds its value better than any make of luxury car in America. And a Mercedes-Benz Diesel is pure Mercedes-Benz.

- The Mercedes-Benz Diesel burns a fuel that is readily available at thousands of service stations all across the country—and that costs an average between 4 and 7 cents less a gallon than gasoline.

Only from Mercedes-Benz—a choice

Of all the world's car manufacturers, only Mercedes-Benz offers you a choice between two distinctly different Diesel models.

Both models combine rare qualities in today's automotive world: Honest 5-passenger capacity, sensible size, reasonable weight, genuine comfort and remarkable reliability. Both offer such Mercedes-Benz engineering advances as fully independent suspension, power-assisted, recirculating ball-type steering and 4-wheel disc

Diesel Fuel Curiosities

If a Diesel engine is a curiosity, the fuel it burns is even more so. For example:

- Diesel fuel is separated from crude oil at much higher temperatures than are needed for gasoline. Yet it can be burned just as it is refined. For optimum performance, gasoline requires as many as 6 chemical additives.
- Diesel fuel delivers more usable energy per gallon than gasoline.
- The very first Diesel fuel was a combination of air and coal dust. It was a temperamental mixture—but it worked! The date was 1892. Today, as scientists everywhere are seeking automotive power alternatives to oil, experiments have turned up an interesting possibility: coal dust.

small investor returns in force to the market.

The new issues now developing are really offering of seasoned, well-known companies such as Pacific Lighting, a Big Board company that has just offered three million additional shares at $17.25 a share, and Union Camp, another Big Board concern, which offered a million additional shares at $32 a share. Both companies have long had stock in public hands.

Others that have come to market include J. P. Morgan & Company, the banking house, which offered two million shares at $54 a share; the Duke Power Company, which offered 5 million shares at $17.63 a share, and the Microdata Corporation, which sold 500,000 shares at $19.63.

The Inland Steel Company, in what would be the first public offering of common stock by a major steel company in a quarter century, is planning to sell 1.5 million shares soon.

A spokesman for the San Diego Gas and Electric Company, which hopes to raise as much as $25 million in a common stock offering this summer, remarked the other day that the company had been selling common stock for the last few years to finance expansion. But the price of the stock, he said, was usually below book value. This year, he added, the price may still be less than book value but it will be higher than in prior years.

"We're still going to sell it," he said, "because we have to keep the common equity portion of our capital structure at an adequate level."

The sheer volume of such offerings, even as measured by the flood of so-called tombstone ads now appearing in newspaper financial pages, clearly is of concern to John M. McCarthy, investment portfolio manager of the $1.6 billion Affiliated Fund.

"If a large number of companies decide to come into the market in a short period of time," he said, "they'll kill the forward momentum of the market" by siphoning off money into new issues.

Mr. McCarthy urged that most new offerings be put off until late April or early May. By that time most annual reports would be in the hands of stockholders, which would enable stockholders to know how a company was doing, he said.

He would like to see the major offerings delayed "until we've had an active positive flow by the public"—or until the Dow equals its high of 1051.70, set in 1973.

"Some public money is already in the market," Mr. McCarthy said, "but others won't come in until the market passes the old mark."

Mr. McCarthy is somewhat alone in arguing that a coming avalanche of new offerings will slow the market's advance.

"It never has," said Donald T. Regan, board chairman of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., the world's biggest broker and one of the biggest participants in new offerings. "There's still plenty of money to go around," he said.

Roger Klein, chief economist for the Securities Industry Association, agrees.

"Even if we had a tremendous volume of equity financing," Mr. Klein argued, "it would have a small effect on the market. Even $12 billion [in new offerings] is infinitesimal when compared with the value of stock outstanding."

The rise in stock offerings is a boon in several ways. "This is good news," said I. W. Burnham 2d, chairman of the S.I.A. and of the Wall Street house of Drexel Burnham & Company. "For investors it means an overdue opportunity for the rewards that should flow to those who risk their savings. For businessmen it means a return to reasonable levels in the cost of raising equity capital and a chance to restore a proper balance between debt and equity," he said.

Wall Street salesmen have a strong incentive to guide them.

"If a customer buys (or sells) 100 shares of a $25 stock, for example, he pays a commission of at least $32.50 to most brokers. If he buys the same stock in a new offering, he pays no commission. But the brokerage firm collects a fee from the company selling the stock. In one such offering, the firm collected $85 for sale of a similar lot of 100 shares.

The individual salesmen, consequently, is given considerable encouragement to sell new offerings. His share of the commission varies from 35 to 40 percent of the total on new offerings, compared with 25 to 30 percent under normal circumstances.

However, salesmen maintain that they have "learned a lesson" since the last market slide and that small investors have learned a lesson as well.

"Dollar-and-cents-wise," one salesman said, "it makes sense for us to push new offerings, but we've flushed a lot of guys out of the business who were only dollar-and-cents wise. A lot of us, of course, will still go where the buck is, but most of us will not push new issues unless it's a good deal for the customer. You can't afford to lose customers today."

This salesman, who first agreed to be identified and then changed his mind after checking with management, argued also that "heavy buying" by big institutions was needed to make new offerings a success but that such big buyers would not always respond unless they felt that a substantial price rise in the stock was still possible.

Brokerage house managers of new stock offerings obviously disagree. One such executive called this reasoning "obviously nonsense." He argued that very often the only way an institution could obtain a large block of desirable stock—without running up the price—would be by waiting for a stock offering.

"Corporations that issue stock would have to be pretty naive," the salesman said, "to believe that institutions will always be willing recipients for their offerings and that every salesman will be motivated by making a few dollars more to sell an offering.

"The customer is smarter, too," he said. "Most of them know."

New company would also have the option of redeeming the preferred after 10 years in cash.

Metropolitan Petroleum wholesales and retails fuel oil in the New York and New England areas and reported sales of $455 million and net earnings of $7.1 million last year.

Belcher sells petroleum products in Florida and the Gulf Coast region. It cleared $9 million on sales of $472 million in 1975.

If the plan is approved by the boards of Pittston and Belcher, and the latter's shareholders, the merged company would be given a new corporate name, a spokesman for Pittston said.

Norton Simon to Buy Orleans of Paris

In another acquisition announcement yesterday, Norton Simon Inc., a big conglomerate in the consumer-products field, is buying Orleans of Paris, France, which produces fragrances and cosmetics.

Although the Norton Simon statement did not mention the amount of cash it was paying for Orleans, sources in the cosmetics trade put the figure at $21 million.

They also noted that Norton Simon owned Max Factor, one of the nation's leading cosmetics concerns, which had sales of $300 million last year. Although Max Factor sales in Britain and Scandinavia were down, concern had not made much headway on the Continent, they added.

(forwarders whose function is to arrange the details of shipment from the exporter factory to the point of consignment) suggests that business is indeed being funneled elsewhere.

Steve Palumbo, a vice president of Behring International Inc., one of New York's biggest freight forwarders, says that volume at his firm has dropped "10 to 20 percent" since the Lisa law went into effect.

Behring, in fact, has written its clients and told them it could no longer handle out of the New York office shipments certified as not being of Israeli manufacture.

Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, Syria and other Arab nations almost invariably require such a certification before they will accept delivery of purchases made here.

Exporters and freight forwarders are also required, as part of the Arab boycott of Israel, to certify—among other things—that the ship on which the goods are being moved does not call at Israeli ports and is not on the Arab blacklist.

The main reason for the relocation of jobs the city can't afford to lose," Mr. Weinstein declared. "Armed alone moved millions of tons through the port—a tremendous amount, enough to keep one small port busy all on its own."

The Chamber of Commerce official said he could not put a number on how many jobs had been affected here, but he added, "You have to think of the packing companies and others who make their living out of foreign trade."

Moral Issue Seen

The Lisa law has the backing of the American Jewish Congress, which contends that the Arab boycott is a moral issue rather than an economic issue. It takes the position that American business "complicity" in the boycott is a form of "economic warfare."

Mr. Ullman says he thinks the Lisa law could be amended in a way that "the port and everybody else could live with," although he says he sees no movement in that direction.

"We've been getting a lot of tea and sympathy in Albany," he said, "but not much of anything else."

Department Moved

Behring has already moved the 40-person purchasing department that used to serve the Arabian American Oil Company from New York City to Houston. Mr. Palumbo said the move was prompted by the need for "better controls" rather than the Lisa law.

Both Mr. Weinstein of the New York Chamber of Commerce and Mr. Ullman of the Freight Forwarders Association insist, however, they have been told that the new statute was which are running 50 percent ahead of 1975 in terms of units and even higher in dollar terms as a result of increased interest in larger cars.

However, there are still problems hindering recovery that also tend to hold back consumer spending. Among them are high unemployment and continuing inflation. On both fronts, however, progress has been reported. More jobs are opening up with increased construction activity, particularly in the residential sector.

The Labor Department reported Friday that the Consumer Price Index rose only 0.1 percent in February, on a seasonally adjusted basis, the smallest increase since February 1971. Of particular interest was the decline in retail food prices of 1.5 percent. If consumers spend less for food, it can be assumed that their purchases of clothing and other items and services will rise.

The Conference Board says its latest poll of 10,000 families throughout the country indicates that almost 1 out of 10 intends to buy a new car used car within next six months. About 1 out of 3 families plans to buy major appliances, and 1 out of 25 families plans to buy a home.

Consumers now have a good savings base for purchases. In 1975 personal income rose to a record of more than $1.2 trillion. During the year consumers managed to save more than $90 billion.

of financing will have been banded during January, February and March this year. Significantly, all this volume has been accomplished by declining interest rates.

The grand total of Federal Government and agency borrowing, local government note and bond sales and corporate and foreign issues for the first quarter is now estimated at $47.3 billion, up 12 percent from the $42.2 billion of fixed-income securities marketed in the first three months of 1975.

The major reason for the increase is the Federal Government's heavier borrowing this year. It is expected to have raised $28.2 billion in the first quarter, up from $17.1 billion in the corresponding period of 1975.

Federal agency debt financing is expected to total almost $1.37 billion, up from $1.14 billion.

Local government bond financing is expected to increase to $7.36 billion from $6.16 billion.

Tax-exempt note sales will drop to $4.04 billion from $7.6 billion.

Corporate and foreign bond sales will decline to $9.36 billion from $10.24 billion.

In the wake of this heavy financing activity, Wall Street's bond dealers may discover that they have more time on their hands. So far, only a little more than $1 billion worth of corporate bonds is scheduled for sale in April plus only about $1.7 billion of tax-exempt notes and bonds. And Treasury borrowing is expected to drop in the months ahead.

Coin Collecting: A High Stakes Hobby

pieces, will go on view in a Bicentennial exhibition at the Philadelphia Mint next month.

Just what is to happen to the collection after the close of that show has not been announced by the Eliasberg heirs.

Harry W. Bass Jr., a Dallas oil producer who flew to New York to bid on dozens of gold coins at this month's sale, observed the other day that he is not certain what return he has made on the millions of dollars he has invested in coins since he started buying 10 years ago. Mr. Bass's purchases and those of two other collectors and a dealer resulted in at least half the gold from the Garrett auction going to Dallas after the sale.

"Today I have 25 percent of my portfolio in coins," Mr. Bass said, adding that these are mostly American gold proof coins minted from the 19th century to 1933, when the United States quit producing gold coins. Terminating his purchases investments, Mr. Bass said that all were made in his role as executor of the Harry W. Bass Jr. trust.

"Studying history, the coins' denomination, their years and other collections has proven thoroughly absorbing," he declared. "And the competition adds spice."

But it was the prospect of profits that originally attracted Mr. Bass to coins. A collector since childhood of coins, Mr. Bass recalled he was told by a friend in 1965 that a roll of Denver Mint 1955 quarters he had purchased for $10 from a bank when they were new had increased in value in the coin market to $135. The oil executive investigated and discovered that the interest and 20th-century European and American coins were indeed skyrocketing in price.

Mr. Bass attends sales and bids openly, flipping his gold pieces decisively forward when he is determined to buy. But other coin buffs are certain he actually buys far more than is apparent at most major auctions, leaving bids with the auctioneer or enlisting the aid of Mike Browley, a Dallas coin dealer.

It was Mr. Browley who—with Julian Leidman, a Silver Springs, Md., dealer—purchase the three 1875 coins (two at $91,000 each and one at $81,000) that brought the top prices of the day at the Garrett sale.

Benjamin Stack, who is a partner with his brother Norman and his cousin Harvey G. Stack in the coin concern (founded in 1858) that bears their name, stresses that the lower prices paid this month for proof gold coins did not represent a softening of the market.

He insisted, in fact, that there was a simpler explanation why the 1875 $3 gold piece that had sold in May 1974 for $150,000, brought $120,000 last year and only $91,000 this month.

"There are a mere handful of the thousands of gold coin collectors who are prepared to spend around $100,000 for a coin today," Mr. Stack said. "Of that group, at least two already owned that $3 gold and were not in the market to buy. Competition was therefore less formidable, so the prices were naturally lower."

What collectors did bid more aggressively for were the gold, silver and copper coins that sold for $500 to $3,000. And some silver coins minted before 1860 set records that were double the values registered in 1973.

"Prices will continue to increase for high quality coins," observed James Hayes, a New Orleans stockbroker who has been buying rare coin issues for 20 years since he was 9 years old. At the Garrett sale he restricted his purchases to silver and copper coins, for which he paid a total of $7,000. He said he was aware that, if history repeated itself, some purchases would not increase in value for several years. Included 1960 to 1963, and 1969 to 1973.

Jobo R. Murell, the 20-year-old president of the Three M Oil Company, a family business in Dallas, divides his time away from the business and his studies—he is a junior at Southern Methodist University—between coins and the horses he owns. "But the oil business is my principal concern," he said after the sale, where he and his father purchased an undisclosed large number of gold issues.

The younger Mr. Murell said coin collecting was a family tradition, now in the fourth generation. But he added, his father changed the interest from a major collecting interest and moved the coins they collected to a bank vault when their home "practically burned down a few years ago."

There is an even greater concern for coin collectors. Most of them store their acquisitions in banks. And some of them are almost as secretive as was Josiah K. Lilly, the pharmaceutical producer, who acquired about 6,000 coins in the 15 years before his death in 1966 without the knowledge of the coin world. His buying done almost entirely through Stack's, resulted in a collection that cost him $2.2 million. It was appraised at $5.5 million before it was given to the Smithsonian Institution in 1967. Its value today is estimated at $15 million to $20 million.

Despite such success stories, a commodity trader who attended the Garrett sale said that in his view inflation was continuing to affect the prices of rare coins.

paid up to $20,000 a year for her training and has been busy putting together the right show-business package for her since her victory, refused to give away the details this afternoon as Miss Hamill sat surrounded by dozens of clicking cameras and whirring tape recorders at a news conference. "It's private, that's all," he said.

She gave two main speeches today, once when she was presented with a bronze, foot-long key to the town by Helen Meany Geravis, a Greenwich resident who won an Olympic gold medal in 1928 for diving, and again while dedicating the town skating rink.

"I hope I don't flub it again," she whispered to her sister before the first speech, which took place on the steps of the Town Hall before the biggest crowd of the day.

"It's good to be home again," she said to the crowd.

"I'd like to thank several people—first of all, my sister, for taking care of the dog and the car and all the phone calls while I was away. And then the post office for delivering all the letters and then Pitney Bowes, my father's company, and then all of you people here today for being the kind of people I'm proud to represent."

At the skating rink, which was not built until after she had left town, Miss Hamill watched two young figure skaters introduced as "Furt" Dorothy Hamill's take turns on the water-logged rink, and then she said she'd like to see the rink would serve the town well.

T.A.-Union Battle: A Classic Tragedy?

By DANION STETSON
Intensified negotiations between the Transit Authority and the Transport Workers Union get under way today at the Americana Hotel, but with critical differences, compared with the past, that have added complications to the always-complex bargaining.

The Transit Authority has no funds available to help pay for the wage increases and other contract improvements sought by the Transport Workers Union. The Transit Authority is emphasizing that it must bargain within the constraints imposed by the current wage freeze. The state, for its part, has just refused to grant any wage increase to some 150,000 employees represented by its Civil Service Employees Association. And the union, citing a rise of nearly 18 percent in the cost of living since its current contract was negotiated, is looking desperately for an improved contract by April 1, 1976.

Wages were up from $3.28 million in 1969-70 to $930 million now, a gain of 43 percent; power and fuel costs up 268 percent. Current average earnings for hourly workers are $16.54 a year. Special city, state and Federal subsidies have been applied to the operating deficits in recent years but not in sufficient quantity to avoid fare increases. For the current fiscal year those government subsidies amount to more than $270 million. For the new fiscal year beginning July 1, this aid apparently will drop to $180 million.

Mr. Yunic has said that there is nothing left to throw to Scylla and Charybdis to devour. The M.T.A.'s most important operating arm, the Transit Authority, and the Transit Authority's subsidiary, the Manhattan and Bronx Surface Operating Authority. The financial position is summed up as follows by the M.T.A.:
Had annual bus and subway riders totals held at the 1969-70 level of 1.66 billion, they would have produced an extra $180 million in revenue (figured at the old 35-cent fare) and eliminated the need for much of today's operating subsidy money. But there was a 450 million loss in annual bus and subway riders in the six-year period.

What wage and fringe increases have not more than the rise in the cost of living in the six years, about $200 million would have been saved. The fare might have been cut instead of being raised three times what it is today.
With the increase in the fare to 50 cents the M.T.A. hoped to have enough revenue to pay out this year's projected $332 million operating deficit. But one of the Federal operating subsidy sources was sharply cut—$125 million was expected, but only $30 million was granted. As a result the M.T.A. finds itself $45 million short and is asking the state for a loan "for a few months" to bridge the gap. And during the 1976-77 fiscal year the Federal program that once was expected to produce $125 million in subsidies will provide nothing. Thus, the gap widens. In fact, a second Federal program providing subsidy money may also be cut.

David L. Yunic

The M.T.A. has urged the State Legislature to provide a permanent regional financing program to put an end to the constant lurching between Scylla and Charybdis. Basically this involves a regional tax (probably a one percent payroll tax) in the 12-county M.T.A. area, a regional 5 percent additional tax on gasoline and placing tolls on the free bridges over the East and Harlem Rivers. But both Democratic and Republican leaders in Albany indicate that no such program will be considered this election year. For one thing it involves seven suburban counties in addition to the five city boroughs, and new taxes this year would be "suicidal" for suburban incumbents, party sources say.

'No Contract, No Work,' vs. No Money

Another fare increase or further cuts in transit service. "Either action would cause severe damage to the city's economy and additional hardship to its people. Moreover, the settlement you reach will have a significant impact on future agreements between the city and its own employees."

The emergency financial act passed in the midst of the city's fiscal crisis last fall, specified that nothing in the statute shall be construed as impairing the right of employees to bargain collectively, but it does impose a freeze on city workers and covered authorities, including the Transit Authority and its subsidiary, the Manhattan and Bronx Surface Transit Operating Authority.

The number of families—called the near poor—that would become ineligible under the new guidelines is disputed by city and state officials. Stephen Berger, outgoing State Commissioner of Social Services, estimated there might be as many as 16,000 children whose families would be found ineligible, while a spokesman for the city's Agency for Child Development estimated 5,000 would be affected.

New Federal Rules Will Reduce Eligibility for Day-Care in City

Parents of many of the 5,000 to 16,000 children expected to become ineligible for city day-care programs under guidelines that become effective April 1 will be forced to return to old alternatives, such as care by relatives or neighbors, or return to welfare rolls, according to city and state officials.

The act specifies, however, that any such agreement on pay deferrals must be certified by the Emergency Financial Control Board as "an acceptable and appropriate contribution toward alleviating the fiscal crisis of the city."

The number of families—called the near poor—that would become ineligible under the new guidelines is disputed by city and state officials. Stephen Berger, outgoing State Commissioner of Social Services, estimated there might be as many as 16,000 children whose families would be found ineligible, while a spokesman for the city's Agency for Child Development estimated 5,000 would be affected.

CBS to Drop Affiliate for Schedule Shifts

CBS-TV, in an unusual action, has notified its Spokane, Wash., affiliate, KXLY-TV, that in August it will end their 23-year affiliation agreement—a move that industry observers say is a warning to other affiliates not to juggle the network schedule.

The move was made because of "a combination of their not showing programs at all or showing them outside their normal time period," Carl S. Ward, a CBS-TV vice president, said. However, he denied it was meant to affect other affiliates.

There are two other commercial television stations in Spokane, which are affiliated with the other networks. Mr. Ward would not comment on whether CBS would shift its affiliation to one of them.

"We were shocked at the way they did it," said Wayne F. McNulty, vice president of KXLY-TV, adding that he had not received official word of any kind explaining the CBS action.

He said that with permission of the network the station had shifted certain "outstanding" all-family shows, such as "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," "Good Times" and "The Bob Newhart Show," from their normal network times (between 8 and 11 P.M.) to 7:30 to 8 P.M. On Friday nights, the station also frequently dropped the network's movie and substituted one of its own.

Television networks want affiliates to carry their shows at the scheduled times for the sake of the national rating. Any program's rating will be diminished by every station that declines to carry it. But some local stations substitute their own shows for network programming in certain time periods to avoid sharing the revenues with the network.

Sheridan Buys Into Black Network

Sheridan Broadcasting Corporation, one of the largest black-owned broadcasting concerns in the country, has purchased 49 percent of the Mutual Black Network for $57,000.

The Mutual Black Network with 94 affiliated radio stations, provides news, sports and special events coverage oriented to black audiences in New York. It is used by WLIB and WBLS.

"We think it's a good business venture," Paul W. Yates, president of Sheridan Broadcasting, said, "and an excellent opportunity to get black management into the largest black network."

Sheridan Broadcasting is based in Pittsburgh and owns two radio stations in that city

CBS Will Rerun Four Police Series

CBS-TV has scheduled late-night reruns next fall of its own detective series "Kojak," as well as reruns of three police series currently broadcast on NBC-TV, "Columbo," "McMillan and Wife" and "McCloud."

The shows will be televised Monday through Friday nights at 11:30 as part of "The CBS Late Movie." The contract for the broadcasts was made between CBS and Universal-MCA, the producers of the programs.

Because of the television industry's family viewing policy before 8 P.M., the market for reruns of the more violent series has been restricted. This, plus a shortage of acceptable

7 G.I.'S DIE IN GEORGIA IN CRASH OF COPTER

BLAIRSVILLE, Ga., March 21 (UPI)—Seven soldiers were found dead today in the wreckage of an Army helicopter atop a North Georgia mountain. An injured soldier managed to walk off the mountain and search crews found a ninth soldier wandering in the undergrowth. The bodies of the victims, who were stationed at Fort Benning, were found about noon atop Aiken Mountain in the Chattahoochee National Forest, 24 hours after their helicopter struck the mountaintop in a fog while on a training mission.

The wreckage was found after one soldier, Shawn Patterson, 18 years old, of Norfolk, Va., walked 2½ miles down the mountain to a house and notified the authorities. Mr. Patterson was hospitalized in guarded condition. The other

Panama Canal Operations Are Resumed After Strike

BALBOA HEIGHTS, Canal Zone, March 21 (Reuters)—The Panama Canal resumed normal operations today after a five-day strike by 700 American pilots and tugmen.

The United States Government company operating the canal said 57 ships passed through the 50-mile waterway last night and today.

But 150 were still lined up to cross between the Atlantic and the Pacific and it will take three to four weeks to clear the backlog, it said.

The American workers abandoned their unofficial strike last night after the company promised to soften austerity measures that would gradually have stripped them of privileges reserved for expatriate employees and left them with the same pay and conditions as Panamanian workers.

India Mine Toll Reaches 431

NEW DELHI, March 21 (Reuters)—The death toll in the Chasmalla mine, disaster has risen to at least 431 with the recovery of more bodies.

Surviving Soldier, Sgt. Albert Helwig, 22, of Detroit, was sighted by a helicopter and ground search crews were directed to him. He was taken to a hospital for tests.

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky., March 21 (UPI)—Three Army crewmen were killed last night when a UH-1H Huey helicopter crashed to a thunderstorm on a field training exercise. Maj. Frank McGourty, the public information officer, said there were no survivors. He identified the pilot as Capt. William L. Allen, 32, and the co-pilot as Warrant Officer George Reynolds, 24, and the crew chief as Specialist 4 David G. Cowan, 27.

'The Mystery of the Andrea Doria' Is on CBS

JOHN J. O'CONNOR
Mystery of the Andrea Doria documentary shown on CBS-TV this day at 8 P.M., claims discovered why the Italian luxury liner off Nantucket in 1956 after colliding with Swedish liner Stockholm, he film was made by Jimbel, a sea diver-lyper, and Elga An- European actress.

Mr. Gimbel dived to take the first pictures of the Andrea Doria on sea bottom 24 hours after the liner sank, and he has been interested in the wreck ever since. Miss Andersen's curiosity was fueled by a Congressional committee report that stated: "The fact remains that a fine, relatively new ship . . . did sink after damage apparently less than she should have been able to withstand."
The documentary poses two questions: Why did the ship's owners decide to fold their case and agree to an out-of-court settlement shortly before the Andrea Doria's engineers were scheduled to testify at a pretrial hearing? And would the $116 million in claims have been settled for about $6 million had the testimony of the engineers been heard?

These questions are not answered directly in the program, but the new evidence collected on a diving expedition last August, strongly implies a case for negligence stemming from a "reportedly missing watertight door." If the door had been in place to seal off a third and fatal flooded compartment on the Andrea Doria, the program asks, would the liner have sunk?

But additional questions do not add up to certain conclusions, something the documentary pretends to be providing. Even at the very end, when Mr. Gimbel seems on the verge of conclusively proving his theory, he runs out of hose and power cable and is unable to proceed farther under water. But, he insists, "I have seen proof of what I came to find out."
Some of his key evidence, though, remains circumstantial.

While Mr. Gimbel, although remarkable persuasive, falls a touch short of certainty, the documentary itself contains some fascinating material beginning with a movie reel of the disaster. Used to open the program, the news film offers a vintage specimen of inflated narration: "Eleven hours after the collision, the Andrea Doria disappears beneath the black veil of the Atlantic—nothing but a swirl of foam to mark the final resting place of a gallant and beautiful lady."
There is some visual padding in the documentary. Shots of the divers being "depressurized" are used much too frequently. But the underwater footage is superb, capturing the hulking wreck as something of a fantastic sea monster. "The Mystery of the Andrea Doria" is narrated by Donald Madden.
